

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

The International studio

Charles Holme, Guy Eglinton, Peyton Boswell, William Bernard McCormick, Henry James Whigham

From the Library of the Fogg Museum of Art
Harvard University

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

Reg. at U.S. Pat. Off.

JOHN LANE COMPANY

110-114 West Thirty Second Street
• NEW YORK •

§ Monthly • 50 cts. 2
Yearly Subscription $ 5.00 Post paid

M. KNOEDLER & Co.

Representative Oil Paintings
by Modern & Old Masters
Select Water-Color Drawings
Choice Engravings & Etchings

NEW YORK: 355 FIFTH AVENUE

LONDON: 15 OLD BOND STREET

PARIS: 23 PLACE VENDÔME

METTLACH WARE

Mark on Printed Ware

Mark on Inlaid Stoneware

I WANT every reader of The International Studio interested in home decoration to have one of the profusely illustrated little books, entitled

"Making Steins in an Old Monastery"

Just send a two-cent stamp to cover postage. Tells how the famous old Abbey of Mettlach, suppressed by the French Republic, became the property of Jean Francois Boch, now the firm of a hundred years ago and was turned into the pottery where are made the famous "Mettlach" Steins, Tankards, Wall Plaques, Punch Bowls, Vases, Jardinieres and Pedestals, Tobacco Jars, Dinner and Toilet Ware in Inlaid Colored Clays, Bas-relief, Printed and Hand-Painted Decorations.

VILLEROY & BOCH

The large tankard is done in colored stone-clay inlays—an artistic achievement which is a closed book to the world's ceramists outside of Mettlach! Ask your dealer to show you Mettlach. Look for the trade marks—registered U. S. Patent Office.

E. R. THIELER (Desk 3), 66 Park Place, New York

Sole Representative for the United States and Canada

The International Studio

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

PLATES

CHARLES SHANNON

THE MERMIAD
See page ii

JOAQUIN SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

BEACHING THE BOAT
See page vii

JOAQUIN SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

MY DAUGHTERS HELEN AND MARIA ON HORSEBACK
(In Valencian Costumes of 1808)
Facing page x

CHARLES SHANNON

THE MODELLER
See page 12

CHARLES SHANNON

THE CUP OF TEA
See page 13

ALGERNON TALMAGE

ST. MARY-LE-STRAND
See page 27

A. HENRY FULLWOOD

THE TOWN HALL, PETERBOROUGH
See page 44

UTAMARO

MAKING UP FOR THE STAGE
See page 55

MARY WILLIAMS

DRAWING IN COLORED CHALKS
See page 63

CONTENTS, MARCH, 1909

| | PAGE |
|---|-------|
| SOROLLA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY.....By Christian Brinton..... | iii |
| Nine Illustrations. | |
| CHARLES H. SHANNON, ARTIST AND CONNOISSEUR..... | 2 |
| Thirteen Illustrations. By C. Lewis Hind..... | |
| SOME ETCHINGS BY LESTER G. HORNBY..... | 17 |
| Six Illustrations. | |
| MR. ALGERNON TALMAGE'S LONDON PICTURES..... | 23 |
| Seven Illustrations. By A. G. Folliott Stokes.... | |
| THE CHA-NO-YU POTTERY OF JAPAN.....By Charles Holme..... | 29 |
| Twenty-eight Illustrations. | |
| A NOTE ON THE ARTISTIC TREATMENT OF ARCHITECTURAL DRAWINGS..... | 45 |
| One Illustration. | |
| PEN DRAWING..... | 45 |
| Fourteen Illustrations. | |
| JAPANESE COLOR PRINTS—V. "MAKING UP FOR THE STAGE"..... | 54 |
| One Illustration. By Utamaro | |
| STUDIO TALK (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)..... | 57 |
| Twenty-five Illustrations. | |
| ART-SCHOOL NOTES..... | 78 |
| Three Illustrations. | |
| REVIEWS AND NOTICES..... | 82 |
| One Illustration. | |
| THE LAY FIGURE: ON THINKING FOR ONESELF..... | 86 |
| THE MINIATURE EXHIBITION AT THE KNOEDLER GALLERIES..... | xiii |
| Eight Illustrations. By Arthur Hoeber..... | |
| SPRING BOOKS FOR STAY AT HOMES AND TRAVELERS..... | xvi |
| ENTRANCE DOORS AND WINDOWS..... | xvii |
| Three Illustrations. | |
| HENRY RANKIN POORE.....By Frederick W. Coburn... .. | xx |
| Six Illustrations. | |
| IN THE GALLERIES.....By Harold Bentley..... | xxv |
| Four Illustrations. | |
| THE MARYLAND INSTITUTE.....By Henry H. Saylor..... | xxvii |
| Five Illustrations. | |
| PETALINE EMBROIDERY.....By Bessie Berry Grabowskii xxx | |
| Five Illustrations. | |
| SOME PORTRAITS BY ELLA S. HERGESHEIMER..... | xxxii |
| Two Illustrations. By Vincent Burton..... | |
| HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE.....By Arthur Hoeber..... | xxxiv |
| Four Illustrations. | |

Schools

Any additional information concerning art study and tuition, as well as circulars and advice, will be cheerfully furnished, free of charge, by this department. Address SCHOOL DEPARTMENT, The International Studio, 110-114 W. 32d St., N. Y.

EUROPEAN CLASSES

SKETCHING TOURS

Ninth Season, 1909

under Mr. Alexander Robinson: Giving students thoroughly practical training in Outdoor sketching. Studio Painting, Compositions, travel and study in Art Galleries.

Class April, May and June

VENICE and Chioggia, Verona, etc.

Pupils may leave March 17th and 27th to join. Further details issue of January and February Studio, also Booklet and information of manager The International Studio, 110 West 32d St., New York. Entries, 22 Aldworth St., Boston. European Entries, care English Bank—Bruges. Summer School, Belgium and Holland, 3 months from July 1.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF ART STRATFORD STUDIOS

Stratford Road, Kensington, W., London, England

Drawing Painting Composition Illustration Etching

Teaching Staff

John M. Swan, R. A. Frank Brangwyn, A. R. A.
William Nicholson G. W. Lambert Niels M. Lund
Joseph Simpson, R. B. A. C. P. Townsley
Edith Hope Helen R. Wilson

Membership limited. Expenses moderate. For further information apply to the Director, C. P. TOWNSLEY

SUMMER ART CLASS IN HOLLAND

HENRY B. SNELL, Instructor
MAURICE C. BOYD, Director

Six weeks' sketching in Volendam, the quaint fishing village on the Zuider Zee. Party sails June 30, on new "Pres. Grant" (18,000 tons). Price, $400.00. (72 days.) Other tours for discriminating travelers. Itineraries ready. Address

THE BOYD TOURS

30 Clarendon Place, Bloomfield, N. J.

MASSACHUSETTS

SUMMER SCHOOL OF PAINTING VINEYARD HAVEN, MASS.

(Island of Martha's Vineyard)

ARTHUR R. FREEDLANDER

FIFTH SEASON—June 20-Sept. 20

Outdoor Classes: Landscape, marine, figure—with three criticisms per week. Special courses for students of Architecture: To develop facility in the handling of water color.

For prospectus address

A. R. FREEDLANDER, 80 West 40th St., N. Y.

EUROPEAN CLASSES—(Continued)

SUMMER PAINTING CLASS

in the Fontainebleau Forest, near Paris, under EUGENE PAUL ULLMAN, TOURS for seeing and studying the Best Art of Europe in England, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Rates from $375.00.

FRANK V. V. TOMPKINS
The Alpine

Broadway and Thirty-third Street - New York City

CALIFORNIA

The College of Fine Arts

University of Southern California, is the leading Art School of the Western Coast. Modern, up to date, perfectly equipped, offering more advantages to the student than any school west of the Mississippi. All branches. Catalogue on request.

W. L. JUDSON, Dean, Los Angeles, California.

Los Angeles School of Art and Design INC., EST. 1887

Oldest, largest, best in So. Cal. Art students need to thoroughly investigate. Every branch under exhibitors in chief galleries. Illustrated catalogue.

L. E. G. MACLEOD, Director.

NEW YORK CITY

The New York School of Art

2237-2239 BROADWAY, cor. 80th St.

WINTER TERM

September 7th, 1908, to June 1st, 1909

A school where individuality and originality of thought and expression are developed along thoroughly artistic and practical lines.

Daily Classes in Life, Portrait, Still Life, Illustration, Composition, Design, Interior Decoration, Normal Art and the Crafts.

Diplomas and Certificates

For particulars address

THE NEW YORK SCHOOL OF ART

SUMMER ART SCHOOLS

If you are planning to study art this summer with the outdoor schools or classes, or desire tuition of any kind, we shall be glad to aid you with information at our command.

Address SCHOOL DEPARTMENT,
THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO, 114 W. 32d St., New York

ON VIEW

A Collection of Barbizon and Dutch Paintings

Rare Proof Etchings by HAIG, DICKSEE

And after W. DEUDY SADLER

AT THE GALLERIES OF

C. W. KRAUSHAAR

EXPERT IN PAINTINGS BY RISING MASTERS

260 Fifth Avenue, near Twenty-ninth Street

NEW YORK

THE RIGHT USE OF ORNAMENT BY MABEL T. PRIESTMAN

THERE are some pieces of furniture that seem harder than others to reform. The hall hat rack is one of them, and the aborrations that have existed with beveled mirrors and glued-on carvings have no excuse for their survival. Beds are another source of wofully misdirected ornament. Wriggling, tortuous curves do not suggest repose in the slightest degree. In going through any large department store one cannot find in them half a dozen well-designed beds that any person of taste would want to possess. Good brass bedsteads with straight lines and simple ornament are few and far between, while goosenecks and swirling curves are in abundance, not only in the brass but in the cheap enamel bedsteads. For sanitary reasons wooden bedsteads are not so much used as metal, but they are so much more beautiful that it seems a pity that wood cannot be more frequently used and the mechanisms where dust is apt to lodge be only of metal.

ROSE VALLEY FURNITURE

There has been a great improvement in wicker furniture during the past ten years. Simple, comfortable shapes in chairs and settees can now be obtained, but there are far too many of the lumpy, bumpy kind still to be seen, with knobs of wood run on to the wicker, detracting from all sense of beauty of line and construction.

It is intended that ornament should please the eye, and, in order to do this, line and color must in themselves be beautiful and restrained by absolute fitness. The right use of the curve, which is the line of beauty, can be made purely ornamental. It is interesting to notice the development of the line and curve. Full of meaning were the curves in the Renaissance period, and how suddenly they fell away from the lines of pure beauty in the Louis-Quatorze and Louis-Quinze periods!

Applied ornament is usually round or flat. To the round belong carving and all forms of relief; to the flat, geometrical designs, applied in various colors, such as marquetry, mosaic, buhl and veneering. Furniture ornamented by the flat style is in itself beautiful, but can only be placed amidst the right surroundings. Rich hangings, costly woods and beautiful rugs are the right surroundings for furniture of this character, and it only looks out of place and vulgar when put in modern, inexpensive homes.

Inlay and marquetry in furniture call for mosaic in stone and tapestry on the wall, and unless used with restraint are apt to be in bad taste.

Rose-Valley furniture shows intricate

"THE MERMAID." FROM THE OIL PAINTING BY CHARLES SHANNON.

(In the possession of Mrs. Scott.)

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOL. XXXVII. No. 45

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

SOROLLA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY BY CHRISTIAN BRINTON

NOTHING could be more fitting than that the luminous and stimulating art of Sorolla, which has lately been seen in Paris and London, should make its initial appearance here under the auspices of the Hispanic Society of America. To a far greater extent than is generally recognized pictures require a sympathetic setting, and it is hence only with such a background as the Society naturally affords that the work of Señor Sorolla, which is at once so advanced, so modern, and yet so full of the large simplicity of the past, can rightly be appreciated. Juiced by his sheer technical facility, his astounding productivity and the universality of his choice Sorolla is indisputably the foremost living Spanish painter. He clearly stands at the head of that aggressive group of artists who are to-day reviving with such veracity and force the ancient pictorial supremacy of their country. Not only is Sorolla the strongest personality of his circle, he, also, in a sense, symbolizes the entire movement toward vigor and freedom of esthetic expression.

The leaders of the new tendency which is so rapidly and vehemently regenerating contemporary Spanish art are Gonzalo Bilbao y Martinez, Joaquín Sorolla y Bastida, Ignacio Zuloaga and Herman Anglada y Camarasa. Slightly younger than Bilbao, and a few years older than Zuloaga and Anglada, Señor Sorolla represents current Peninsular painting at its floodtide. In common with his colleagues he is a realist, but is far more specific in his versions of reality than are the other men. Sorolla seems to have been one of those positive spirits who are predestined to take a definite view of actuality. The circumstances of his birth and the accidents of his early training were such as to foster a taste for the concrete and the explicit, and never, during years of feverish industry, has he wandered from the sphere of nature and natural phenomena.

His themes have been multiple life which surges with sparkling vividness of form. Yet there is vastly more to his frank worship of objective reality than is apparent. His work is a joyous hymn to the sun, which in his own land suffuses his canvases with scintillant glory. Sorolla is by no means an enthusiastic champion of native art. He is a cosmopolitan. His subjects are often as contemporary, but it is in his manner that he stands alone and that his work so antly differentiates itself from that of the painters of his own, or indeed, of any other school.

This fecund and racial genius, who, like Goya and Zuloaga, has opened the eyes of the world to the power of the latter-day Peninsular palette, was born at Valencia of humble parents on February 12, 1863. Left an orphan before reaching the age of three the child was cared for by his maternal grandfather, Don Isabel Bastida, and his father, Don Juan Piqueres, a locksmith by trade. As it was not till after entering school that the boy was seen to devote more of his time to making elaborate sketches than to the actual curriculum, he was removed from the classroom and taken on in the locksmith shop as an apprentice. He worked industriously at the forge, but did not mean-while at a local school for art. He carried off every available prize and was permitted, at fifteen, to enter the Academia and confine his entire energies to the study of art. The youth's career at the Academia de Bellas Artes de San Carlos, to which he had been admitted, was equally promising. He was a pupil of Señor Esquivel, and during this period, had the good fortune to be the pupil of Don Antonio Gual, who had proved his generous patronage of the young artist. Doña Clotilde, his mother, had been a pupil of Don Antonio Gual.

Considering the fact that the young artist

The INTERNATIONAL • STUDIO •

VOL. XXXVII. No. 145

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

MARCH, 1909

SOROLLA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY BY CHRISTIAN BRINTON

NOTHING could be more fitting than that the luminous and stimulating art of Sorolla, which has lately been seen in Paris and London, should make its initial appearance here under the auspices of the Hispanic Society of America. To a far greater extent than is generally recognized pictures require a sympathetic setting, and it is hence only with such a background as the Society naturally affords that the work of Señor Sorolla, which is at once so advanced, so modern, and yet so full of the large simplicity of the past, can rightly be appreciated. Judged by his sheer technical facility, his astounding productivity and the universality of his choice Sorolla is indisputably the foremost living Spanish painter. He clearly stands at the head of that aggressive group of artists who are to-day reviving with such veracity and force the ancient pictorial supremacy of their country. Not only is Sorolla the strongest personality of his circle, he, also, in a sense, symbolizes the entire movement toward vigor and freedom of esthetic expression.

The leaders of this new tendency which is so rapidly and vehemently regenerating contemporary Spanish art are Gonzalo Bilbao y Martinez, Joaquín Sorolla y Bastida, Ignacio Zuloaga and Herman Anglada y Camarasa. Slightly younger than Bilbao, and a few years older than Zuloaga and Anglada, Señor Sorolla represents current Peninsular painting at its floodtide. In common with his colleagues he is a realist, but is far more specific in his versions of reality than are the other men. Sorolla seems to have been one of those positive spirits who are predestined to take a definite view of actuality. The circumstances of his birth and the incidents of his early training were such as to foster a taste for the concrete and the explicit, and never, during years of feverish industry, has he wandered from the sphere of nature and natural phenomena.

His themes have been chosen directly from that multiple life which surges about him in all its sparkling vividness of form, color and movement. Yet there is vastly more to Sorolla's art than its frank worship of objective appearance. He is primarily a painter of light and atmosphere. His work is a joyous hymn to that outdoor radiance which in his own land suffuses all things with its scintillant glory. Sorolla is by no means the only enthusiastic champion of native character and incident. His subjects are often akin to those of his contemporaries, but it is in his mastery of sunlight that he stands alone and that his art so triumphantly differentiates itself from that of all Spanish painters of his own, or, indeed, of any period.

This fecund and racial genius, who, together with Zuloaga, has opened the eyes of the world to the power of the latter-day Peninsular palette, was born at Valencia of humble parents on February 27, 1863. Left an orphan before reaching the age of three the child was cared for by his maternal aunt, Doña Isabel Bastida, and her husband, Don José Piqueres, a locksmith by trade. As it was not long after entering school that the boy was seen to devote more of his time to indiscriminate sketching than to the actual curriculum his uncle removed him from the classroom and placed him in the locksmith shop as an apprentice. He worked industriously at the forge, studying drawing meanwhile at a local school for artisans, where he carried off every available prize and, in consequence, was permitted, at fifteen, to enter the San Carlos Academy and confine his entire energies to the pursuit of art. The youth's career at the Academia de las Bellas Artes de San Carlos, to give it its full official title, was equally promising. He was the favorite pupil of Señor Estruch, and he furthermore, during this period, had the good fortune to enlist the interest of Don Antonio García, who for some years proved his generous patron and whose daughter, Doña Clotilde, he subsequently married.

Considering the fact that, as far as his own country is concerned, he was a veritable pioneer in his chosen field, the chronology of Señor Sorolla's artistic life cannot fail to be without significance. He passed with rapid, insatiate energy from the glittering exquisiteness or empty academic formalism about him to an alert intensity of perception and rendition which in the end found no theme alien and no problem impossible of solution. In order thoroughly to understand the man and his work it must be recalled that he was not a purely Valencian product, that through his veins coursed the blood of a Catalonese mother and an Aragonese father, and that a wholesome independence both mental and esthetic was thus his birthright. His first appearance in the world of art was made at the local academy in 1880, when he exhibited a few 'prentice studies, but four years later, when he sent to Madrid The Second of May, his career may be said to have begun in all earnestness. The canvas now hangs in the Balaguer Museum at Villaneuva y Geltrú. There is nothing remarkable about it; it is simply one of those ambitious compositions with which such able historiographers as Pradilla, Alisal and Checa have long made us familiar. It was not, however, the picture proper, but the manner in which the subject was approached, that struck a new and decisive note in the art of its time. Instead of painting from imagination or relying upon preconceptions of the dramatic the youthful realist grouped his models about the dusty bull-ring of Valencia and steeped them in actual smoke in order to get the most natural effect possible. The painstaking efforts of his already famous contemporaries never got beyond the plane of glorified still life; the canvas of Sorolla pulsed with truth, action and the clarifying thrill of first-hand observation. He had already paid several visits to Madrid, where he studied the works of Velázquez, Ribera and Goya at the Prado, and the sovereign lessons in reality which they taught him were manfully, if crudely, put to the test of specific practice in a picture whose chief merit is that it was painted boldly in the free, exultant light of day.

III

Sorolla at the Hispanic Society

The same year Sorolla was fortunate enough to win in open competition the coveted Prize of Rome, the Provincial Deputation of his native city sending him to the Italian capital, where he joined his countrymen, Pradilla, Villegas, Benlliure and Sala. After a few months' sojourn he, however, set out for France, and it was in Paris, not in the moribund Rome of the middle eighties, that the young Spaniard found legitimate inspiration, and this new source of strength he discovered in the sincere and homely naturalism of Bastien-Lepage. Reinforced by this unlooked-for confirmation of his own inherent leanings he returned to Rome, and later drifted to Assisi, where he spent his days copying various canvases and communing with the older spirits of Renaissance art. There can be little question that this entire foreign interlude, save the six months in Paris, was so much lost time. The works produced during these infertile and aimless years, such as The Burial of Christ and Father Chofre Protecting a Madman, which is now in the Provincial Hospital at Valencia, are unconvincing and indecisive, and it was not until he returned to Spain and settled once again amid familiar scenes that nature began revealing to the young artist those vivifying secrets which became the soul of all his subsequent effort.

At first he painted mainly water-color sketches and did some illustrating for the papers. The Boulevard and The Procession at Burgos also date from this period, but they were in no wise typical of his real caliber, which was not, in fact, manifest until he sent to the International Exhibition at Madrid in 1892 his Otra Margarita. Another Marguerite has since that day touched the hearts of thousands to whom the painter's name, even, has remained unknown. The picture crossed the ocean the following year and was a feature of the Spanish section at the Chicago World's Fair, and at present hangs in the St. Louis Museum. With the success of this sincere and poignant bit of social realism Sorolla seemed, in truth, to find himself. He started upon the forward path with increasing energy and enthusiasm and by 1900 had won the Grand Prix at the Paris Exposition with his Triste Herencia, besides exhibiting four other subjects of convincing mastery, including Sewing the Sail and Luncheon on Board. So unremitting was his industry and so great was his innate capacity for work that six years later he was able to show at the Georges Petit Galleries in Paris five hundred finished pictures and studies embracing every conceivable variety of theme. The success of this exhibition was in some measure duplicated last spring in London, when there were placed on view at the Grafton Galleries two hundred and seventy-eight canvases from the same tireless brush. And, finally, New York is to-day able, through the liberality and enthusiasm of Mr. Archer M. Huntington, to enjoy this art in all its richness, sanity and spontaneous effulgence, and under conditions that are frankly ideal.

Such are the essential facts of Sorolla's artistic progress; but beneath this bare outline lurks something infinitely more important, and that is the spirit and inner significance of this many-sided activity, the meaning of this splendid and salubrious art, which by its very diversity is apt to disconcert or bewilder the average visitor to the Hispanic Society display. There is, after all, but one way to approach the work of Sorolla, or, as a matter of fact, that of any painter, and that is through the medium of the artist's own national as well as individual esthetic background. The impetuous and indefatigable author of these three hundred and fifty-six canvases which now enliven the walls of the Hispanic Society merely carries onward with the help of the brilliant chromatic palette of to-day the immutable traditions of Spanish art. In common with his great predecessors, who painted with such subdued and restrained gravity of tone, he knows but one lesson and that is the lesson of actuality. There has never been and there can never be anything speculative or philosophical in the art of the Iberian Peninsula. From Velázquez downward the Spaniards have been a race of pictorial impressionists, and it was to this fountain head of truth that Edouard Manet and all the later men were obliged to turn when they wished to secure a formula with which to combat the false classicism and flamboyant rhetoric of the midcentury in France. Spanish painting does not express symbols, it records facts. These men are incapable of evolving an elaborate, organic epitome of nature and humanity. Yet they offer, in compensation, the most supple and masterful presentation of the purely objective that the world has thus far seen. The eye, not the mind, is the controlling factor in all this work, little of which seems to lose its inherent freshness and spontaneity. The graphic vitality of Velázquez and Goya is frankly imperishable, and there are few Spanish artists who do not share in some measure the same priceless heritage.

BEACHING THE BOAT
BY JOAQUIN SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

Sorolla at the Hispanic Society

Fulfilling the broad, traditional requirements of Spanish painting in general, yet bathed in the vibrant splendor of the modern palette, the art of Sorolla comes as a distinct revelation to the American public. In technical surety it suggests Zorn, Besnard or Sargent, yet none of these men equals the sturdy Valencian in his close contact with reality, in the rapidity of his impressionistic notation or the magnificent robustness of his outlook. There is in the work of Sorolla none of Zorn's northern sensualism, none of the nervous effeminacy of Besnard, and none of the mundane cynicism of Sargent. Señor Sorolla presents the spectacle, rare indeed in art, of an absolutely sound and perfectly balanced organism. It seems as though there must have drifted across to his own glistening playas some of that antique Peloponnesian blitheness of which the world of to-day knows so little. You will find in the earlier work tenderness and humanity; witness Another Marguerite, A Wearisome Journey, A Sad Inheritance, and, above all, that delicate monochrome in gray entitled Mother, but never, in the later range of this art, do you encounter the slightest hint of morbidity, of bodily deformity or of soul fatigue. Señor Sorolla has advanced year by year toward a more instinctive choice of subject and a clearer, crisper sense of color. The compositions of former days, while circumstantial and graphic, were more or less studied, and the tones darker and more sharply contrasted, but to-day his arrangements are taken expressly from nature and his harmonies are keyed up to an outdoor brilliance which is almost blinding. It is astonishing how Sorolla can secure by simple means such fulfilling results. His palette is a modest one, consisting of but six or seven colors. There is absolutely no blending or overpainting, each tone being placed directly on the canvas with a free, yet efficient finality. The method is impressionistic, but it is not the detached divisionism of the later Frenchmen and Italians; the stroke is singularly liquid and flowing. Sorolla everywhere shows himself a master technician. In his accurate feeling for anatomical form he stands almost alone, and for downright prismatic splendor he has no equal.

While the subjects this superbly endowed painter chooses cover so wide a field, he loves best of all those which he finds along the gleaming Valencian sea strand where he passes the summer months. It was the Malvarrosa beach which some years since gave him those pitiful waifs who crowd about the dark-robed priest in A Sad Inheritance, and it is the beach of Jávea, further south, which to-day offers him countless scenes full of ebullient light and color. No phase of this radiant Mediterranean existence has escaped him. Here is the solitary Mussel Gatherer, there are the Swimmers encircled by green, foam-flecked currents; here strong, sunburned fishermen and great, tawny oxen are majestically Beaching the Boat, and here, there and everywhere scamper about, amid breeze, sun and wave, bronze urchins and beautiful, flexible maidens. No shadow falls aslant these happy children and superlatively normal mothers. All is natural and chaste. It is a dazzling panorama of golden sands and emerald or azure sky and water in which humanity plays its instinctive and Godgiven part. There is in these endlessly diversified episodes no striving after effect, no desire to perpetuate anything save the

FISHING BOATS, VALENCIA

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

MARIA AT BIARRITZ

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

UPON THE SAND

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

PLAYING IN THE WATER

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

SENORA SOROLLA
IN BLACK
BY JOAQUIN SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

MY DANCE ON THE
IN A
BY J. A.

MY DAUGHTERS HELEN AND MARIA
ON HORSEBACK
(IN VALENCIAN COSTUMES OF 1808)
BY JOAQUIN SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

Sorolla at the Hispanic Society

simple, wholesome facts of life and nature. In these canvases, whether huge finished pictures or hasty sketches, all the world is in holiday mood; work alike for master and for beast of burden has become a pleasure, and pleasure has taken on a pagan joyousness which had long since seemed lost to mankind. When he moves inland and sets up his easel amid Valencian garden, orchard or vineyard it is the same story. Each theme is depicted with a colorful picturesqueness which is at once free, broad and intensely local. All is rapid and instantaneous as before. No chance effect, however subtle, eludes his ever-prompt observation. There is no mistaking the girl who is patiently sorting oranges, the women seated in the sunlit doorway mending nets, or, indeed, any of these types which add such distinctive notes to Spanish rural life. In An Old Castilian and Leonese Peasants we have more specific characterization than is customary, yet never is the racial flavor neglected.

While it is manifest that Señor Sorolla has no peer in his ability to seize the fleeting and momentary effects of sun and shade, to depict a scene in all its transient intimacy—that, in brief, his powers of ready notation are truly phenomenal—it is not so apparent that he is able deliberately to face a sit-

AT THE BATH, VALENCIA

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

ter and reconstruct upon canvas his inner as well as his outer semblance. There is frank charm to the outdoor likenesses of his wife and children, but, save for the portraits of Christian Franzen, the Danish photographer, and of the novelist, Blasco Ibañez, the majority of these versions of the great scholars, statesmen and artists of his acquaintance, as well as those of the Spanish royal family, are somewhat lacking in depth and inevitability. None of these faces gazes at you with the spiritual intensity of a Watts, with that mental concentration which Lenbach so trenchantly achieved, or the assertive physical externalism of a Sargent. In Sorolla's case it is purely a question of temperament. He is not contemplative. He does not, in portraiture, patiently await that confiding self revelation which comes with time alone.

Sorolla at the Hispanic Society

BOXING RAISINS

BY J. SOROLLA Y BASTIDA

It is unnecessary in the art of Señor Sorolla to seek the profound, the abstract or the analytical. That which is displayed always and everywhere is, rather, a passionate attachment to outward things. Sorolla lives in a constant state of luminous and impulsive exteriorization. His pictorial language is well nigh universal, but it is fundamentally a language of visual appearances. He is an observer whose sole instinct is to record with an almost irrepressible automatism that which happens to hold his fancy for the moment. And yet, although these myriad-hued impressions may at first appear wanting in system and relation, there nevertheless runs, at least unconsciously, through the art of Señor Sorolla a unity of feeling and purpose which links together every stroke of that restless and magical brush. Diverse as she may seem, Nature herself is constantly achieving a closer structure and a sub-tlar synthesis of her varied forces, and it is thus with the work of Sorolla, which is Nature's reflex in so far as he can make it. If this art is anything, it is an apotheosis of visible, external beauty. It rises to positively lyrical heights in its worship of solar radiance—it is a jubilant symphony of sunlight.

C. B.

"FURNITURE DESIGNING AND DRAUGHTING" (William T. Comstock), by Alvan Crocker Nye, Ph.B., instructor in Pratt Institute, is an admirable aid to the designer. It carries over thirty working drawings and plates.

A SIMILAR high technical merit marks William B. Tuthill's guide in making working drawings, entitled, "Practical Lessons in Architectural Drawing" (Comstock), now in its thirteenth edition.

A VALUABLE assistance in any work involving lettering is Thomas F. Meinhardt's original system for spacing, described with plates and tables in "Practical Lettering" (The Norman W. Henley Publishing Company).

THE STUDIO

CHARLES H. SHANNON,
ARTIST AND CONNOISSEUR.
BY C. LEWIS HIND.

ROAMING through rooms of ultra-modern pictures at Berlin, I paused before an eight-foot canvas called The Painter at Work. The scene depicted was mid-winter, snow covered the ground, icicles hung from the trees, you could feel the bitter wind, and in the foreground of the forlorn waste stood the painter, grim, determined, fur-clad, pinched with cold, his canvas held taut by small cables, at work. I make no criticism of his method. If it suits him to paint direct from inclement nature, it is the right way for him. The result is all that concerns the critic, who must forget his own predilections, and consider only the intention and performance of the painter, whether the end be a snow-and-ice piece by a hardy German, a vivid Venetian actuality by Mr. Sargent, or some idyll of form and colour by Mr. Charles Shannon, noted, remembered, and after long reflection worked out in the tranquillity of his studio.

Indeed, the time-honoured and time-weary phrase, emotion remembered in tranquillity, might be applied to Mr. Shannon's art. Repose is its note. Reflection envelops it like an atmosphere. When he paints his own portrait you feel that you have passed into some still, unharassed corner of the world, as in the picture illustrated on this page, showing the artist seated in his studio beneath the protecting majesty of a Greek torso. The painter is as calm as the torso. He is working, but not in the way that the hardy German works; his æsthetic consciousness is active, stirred by the lithographs, drawings, photographs, or whatever they may be, that he has taken from the portfolio and scattered for his delight. The most prominent among them is one of his own lithographs. There is no vanity in that. When a man's entire life is devoted to his art, and to the collection of rare and beautiful things that feast the eye and feed the brain, his own particular productions become almost impersonal, a step in the edifice of art, which began so long ago and of which the end is endless.

In writing about a painter it is arguable whether it is better to know him personally, or only through

PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST

BY CHARLES SHANNON

XXXVII. No. 145.—MARCH, 1909.

"AN IDYLL"

BY CHARLES SHANNON

his works. Either way there is loss and gain. I know Mr. Shannon personally, and knowing him it is almost impossible to dissociate the artist from the connoisseur and collector. There are all kinds of collectors; he is a collector of rare taste and discernment, competent to choose the best—from a Tanagra figure to the last fancy of Mr. Wells, from a Piero di Cosimo to a Daumier. In each of the rooms that surround the studios, and on the walls of the studios, are spoils of the climes. I see, as I write, the Watteau drawings in the dining-room, the case of Greek figurines in the drawing-room, the Japanese prints in the hall—ah! that hall. I linger there when I enter the flat, I linger there when midnight has struck, and I should be departing: and there is always an addition to the collection. Sometimes during the evening when we sit in playful or fierce converse—always on art—this question is addressed—"Any new extravagance?" and for answer there is always a dip into a recess, and the bringing to light of a new treasure. On the last occasion it was a Rubens drawing—a head, full of character, delicate yet incisive. How was it obtained? That would be betraying a secret. Not in the ordinary way, you may be sure, not picked from the priced exhibits in a picture gallery. That is not the way of your true collector; his way is to ransack portfolios, to turn the sheets feverishly, to peep and peer, and, perhaps, at last swiftly to withdraw the rarity from the rest.

Here I must pause, for on this subject of collecting which fills Mr. Shannon's leisure hours with excitement, joy, and sometimes with despair, the name of his companion in art and connoisseurship, Mr. Charles Ricketts, claims immediate attention. The two are inseparable; they live together; they collect together; they work in adjoining studios, and in any account of the life, aims, and appreciations of Mr. Shannon, the name of Mr. Ricketts runs to the tongue as dutifully as that of Sullivan to Gilbert, or Fletcher to Beaumont. As the versatility of Mr. Ricketts is to form the subject of a future paper in this magazine, I may, for the present, not without difficulty, attempt to avoid his name.

But let me first indulge in an impression of these inseparables seen years ago, long before I knew

"THE SAPPHIRE BAY"
BY CHARLES SHANNON

Charles Shannon

them. A sale of Japanese prints had been announced, and I Autolycus-like, strolled into the auction-room soon after the dispersal had begun. The prints, a frowzy-looking lot, were tied up in bundles of twenty-five. I bought three of the bundles for a ridiculous price, and was wondering how I should convey the awkward purchase home, when suddenly I was vouchsafed an object-lesson in the method of the true collector. Already I had observed two young men who looked like amateurs in the auction-world. One seemed feverishly active, mentally not physically—he, I learned later, was Charles Ricketts; the other appeared to garb his interest under a look of sweet indifference—he was Charles Shannon. Plainly they knew precisely what they wanted and what they were waiting for; they did not buy the bundles as I had done, as if the prints were apples and one pound weight was as good as another. No, they waited for one particular bundle which, presumably, they had examined beforehand. When it was dumped upon the table, the sweet indifference of Charles Shannon vanished, and Charles Ricketts ineffectually tried to conceal his feverish eagerness.

He bid quickly, short, sharp bids, while his companion looked on with anxiously benignant approval. The hammer fell. The feverish Charles seized the bundle and cut the string. His long, quick fingers flitted through the items, picked out one print, and instantaneously the benignant Charles indicated another. The remaining prints were tossed aside, left on the table, the rejected of the collectors, and the twain departed hastily with their two treasures. I conveyed my three bundles home in a cab, made my choice, and gave the remnant to a Philistine for a wedding present. Which was the better way?

The Shannon-Ricketts companionship began as far back as 1884 in a wood-engraving school at Lambeth. In those inauspicious surroundings the two artists met, each purposing to earn a living by wood-engraving. As process work has now almost entirely supplanted it, the companions would have been to-day among the unemployed had they not possessed reserves of talent beyond the equipment necessary for the honourable but unremunerative craft of wood-engraving. Indeed, Mr. Shannon had already become a painter. While still an art-student he exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery; and he was also a member of the original Pastel Society. But the labour in the wood-engraving class was not thrown away—far from it. "Once," sang a poet, "once, from the ashes of my heart arose a blossom." "Five times," might the companions say or sing, "five times from the lethargic routine of that wood-engraving class arose our Dial," known to the elect as "an occasional publication edited by C. S. Ricketts and C. H. Shannon to counteract the ill-effects of compulsory book illustration." The first number was published in 1889, the second three years later in a different size and binding. Three more numbers were issued in successive years, and then the hands of The Dial

"THE SCULPTOR (MRS. SCOTT)"

BY CHARLES SHANNON

"TIBULLUS IN THE HOUSE OF DELIA." BY CHARLES SHANNON

"THE SLEEPING NYMPH"
BY CHARLES SHANNON

"HERMES AND THE INFANT BACCHUS"
BY CHARLES SHANNON

"THE LADY WITH A CYCLAMEN (HON. MRS. C. DOWDALL)"

BY CHARLES SHANNON

ceased to revolve. It was a brave attempt, a forlorn hope of art against the citadel of commercialism, but although I fear it did not make its editors rich beyond the dreams of avarice, the five numbers gave Mr. Ricketts the opportunity to present his wood-cuts and Mr. Shannon his lithographs to the world. To turn in this year of grace from a perusal of a morning paper to an editorial article in No. 2 of The Dial, as I have just done, is to—well, it is to be reminded what a strange and happy land is England where such contrasts in prose are possible. The wise buy these occasional and brief-life publications. The investment is sound. Before me, as I write, stretches a wall adorned with Mr. Shannon's lithographs, severed from The Dial, framed, preserved, increasing in value every year.

So engrossed did Mr. Shannon become in lithography that for some years he ceased to exhibit as a painter. He and Mr. Ricketts worked all through 1891 on the woodcuts for an edition of "Daphnis and Chloe," and through 1892 on the woodcuts for Marlowe's "Hero and Leander." In 1897 he again began exhibiting as a painter, and was awarded a gold medal at Munich. Since then he has exhibited constantly.

Nobody would call Mr. Shannon a popular painter. He never produces a problem-bridge or a death-sentence picture. Even if he were a Royal Academician it would never be necessary to place the protecting rail before one of his pictures. He paints for himself; he suggests no literary controversy; there is no suggestion of sensation in any of his works; no hint of a desire to compel vagrant attention; but there is in them always a striving for reasoned beauty and rhythm. He is a dreamer in a study, never an orator on the hustings. Decorative expression marks the patterns

"THE MODELLER." FROM AN ORIGINAL
LITHOGRAPH BY CHARLES SHANNON.

Charles Shannon

"THE CUP OF TEA." FROM AN ORIGINAL
LITHOGRAPH BY CHARLES SHANNON.

Charles Shannon

of his dreams whether the design be suggested by the classic or by the modern world. Constable once said, "When I am before nature, I try to forget that I have ever seen a picture." I do not suppose that Mr. Shannon ever forgets that he has seen a picture. The sumptuousness and magnificence of art, such art with which he is in especial sympathy, say that of Giorgione and Titian, and in latter days of Puvis de Chavannes, is always present to his æsthetic consciousness, which works in the subdued regions of the Quietists.

Some painters are all craftsmen, Mr. Shannon is half-craftsman and half-connoisseur. In his pictures I see the virtuoso as well as the artist; the Venetian maker of rich and suave decorations as well as the modern painter; the designer of patterns with man and woman as a pictorial background, Puvis de Chavannes-like rather than Bastien-Lepage-like. In his pictures I see that striving after the expression of something more than mere craftsmanship, which was explained in one of the rare editorial articles in The Dial.

"We make no claim to originality, not feeling wiser than did Solomon who doubtless wrote the Song of Songs; for all art is but the combination of known quantities, the interplay of a few senses only; that some spirit seems to transfuse these, is due to a cunning use of a sixth sense—the sense of possible relation commonly called Soul, probably a second sense of touch more subtle than the first—and this sense is more common to the craftsman used to self-control than habit would allow."

In all Mr. Shannon's works there are signs of that spirit of transfusion, that something which is neither sight nor touch, urging him, from the inception to the last lingering touches on a picture, to call to his aid beauty—æsthetic, spiritual, sensuous as the case may be—but always beauty. So insistent is this call that sometimes drawing gives way to arrangement. Realism vanishes before it. Such "actual" subjects as women and children of to-day

MR. CHARLES SHANNON'S STUDIO AT KENSINGTON

PAINTED FAN

BY CHARLES SHANNON

bathing or playing on the sea-shore, one of his favourite themes in painting and lithography, although founded upon observation, are as subject to his prepossessions of rhythmic beauty, and to that "sixth sense" he cultivates so quietly and persistently, as any of the ancient-world themes he re-creates.

I hope my meaning may be made clear by an examination of the pictures that illustrate this article. Study the sea-pieces. This is the sea, not the live sea of Henry Moore, nor the sullen sea of Matisse, moaning with menacing movement between two storms. The Shannon seas have been brooded upon with the inner eye until the pattern of waves and the crests of foam have become "documents" (see The Dial, No. 2, p. 25). Documentary, too, are the figures in The Sapphire Bay, where water and nudes are controlled to unite in a rhythmic design. His pictures must always be rhythmic. Even when pathos intrudes into them, the curious and catching pathos that in the ancient world was associated with the idea of half-realised humanity—mermaids, centaurs, hermaproditites—even then, as in the haunting picture called The Mermaid, we feel that the emotional tragedy could never have happened unless the loves of these two, the eager and the awe-struck, had agonised in a decorative setting.

Like Watteau, Mr. Shannon paints woman, not any particular woman, except in his portraits where his feeling is towards a certain type, a most difficult type to paint, but in which he has achieved many successes, a type whose pallor is made dramatic by the alternating manifestations of emotion and mind. In his subject pictures the individual is usually merged in the type. The quiescent Delia in Tibullus in the House of Delia is not so much an individual as the central incident of a pageant that belongs to myth or history, but hardly to life. Do we desire incessantly to be reminded of life? Assuredly not. Connoisseurs in the unreal real realms of the pictorial imagination must be very material or hard to please who do not find instant pleasure in the two circular pictures from Mr. Shannon's brush called Hermes and the Infant Bac- chus and The Sleeping Nymph. Each is a reasoned and intimate expression of the painter's temperament and talent. They are the pictures of a dreamer who weaves his dream from the stuff of life, but it must always be resolved, composed, and coloured in the imagination.

I do not propose to deal here with Mr. Shannon's lithographs, as they have already been discussed in this magazine with sympathy and discernment by Mr. Martin Wood (see THE STUDIO, October, 1904). Some of them repeat, with variations, the subjects of the pictures, as The Cup of Tea, illustrated in these pages, an austere intimacy, the arrested moment which it pleases him often to portray. If one is allowed to have preferences I would cite the intensity of The Modeller, the mystical charm of The Shepherd tending his lambs at dawn in a nimbus of light out-shining from the rays of his lantern, and the romance that his aptly-named Romantic Landscape evokes.

There are many mansions in the house of art and it is no small thing to say of Mr. Shannon that he has kept his reserved and select. What he is, he is, pursuing his own ideals, watchful of the present but loving the older world. To sustain its tradition of beauty, to add to the store: that is his aim. In that environment he lives and works, aloof from the world in his sky studio, but of it in the rare records of the past that surround him.

The windows of the spacious studio are thrown open; the murmur ascends from the creeping traffic; the buildings rise and are nothing in the vastness. There without is the world, near yet so remote, all of it—unselected. Within are his selections, his choices. As he paints he forgets them; but their beauty colours the imagination of this child of art process, as he resolves his dreams and fashions them into pictures. Vivre sans rêve, qu'est-ce ?

The Etchings of Lester G. Hornby

SOME ETCHINGS BY LESTER G. HORNBY.

THE six etchings reproduced on this and the following pages are the work of a young American artist whose achievements with the pen and pencil have been illustrated in these pages on more than one occasion during the past three years. It is just over three years since Mr. Lester Hornby left the school in Boston, Mass., where he received his preliminary training, and, following a custom observed by so many American artists, made his way to Europe to gain further experience and inspiration in the world's chief art centres. After a tour in Britain and on the Continent, which he turned to the best advantage, he took up his quarters in Paris. It was in Paris, whose odd nooks and corners and old buildings have inspired a whole school of etchers with Méryon at their head, that Mr. Hornby's first essays in etching were accomplished, and what success has attended his efforts will be seen in the examples now illustrated on these pages. The technique of etching seems to have presented little difficulty to him, for within a very brief period he had so far familiarized himself with its intricacies as to be able to produce a series of plates which the Société des Artistes Français found sufficiently meritorious to include in their annual Salon. In the same year (1907) the Salon d'Automne paid the same compliment to his skill, and last year the old Salon again saw another budget of proofs from his hand. In Germany, too, his etchings met with appreciation when shown at Dresden last year.

Mr. Hornby executes his etchings direct from nature; at least, those which represent scenes in Paris and other French towns have been done in this way, the artist often finding himself surrounded by little groups of curious onlookers, whose curiosity, however, did not seem to be gratified by the sight of a black plate with scarcely visible lines. He prefers to use the needle only, eschewing the dry-point and aquatinting, and his plates are but little larger than the full-page reproductions now given.

"CANAL ST. MARTIN, PARIS"

BY LESTER G. HORNBY

OLD COURT IN RUE VERGINEYTORIX

FROM AN ETCHING
BY LESTER G. HORNBY

FROM AN ETCHING
BY LESTER G. HORNBY

FROM AN ETCHING
BY LESTER G. HORNBY

MARKET DAY ON ST. EDWARD QUINET

FROM AN ETCHING
BY LESTER G. HORNBY

Mr. Algernon Talmage's London Pictures

MR. ALGERNON TALMAGE'S
LONDON PICTURES. BY
A. G. FOLLIOTT STOKES.

ART, as all who have wooed her know, is an exacting mistress. She requires the best that a man has to give. Nothing but a single-hearted devotion throughout life's best years will win and retain her approval. More than mere ability is required to do this. There must be a touch of genius somewhere, or craft will never blossom into Art. In other words, the facsimile-monger will never become the creator. He must be content to remain a skilled craftsman. He has learned a medium of expression—no easy task in itself—but he has nothing to say, no message to impart. This is the final test. It is the soul that counts in painting as in all the Arts. No mere cunning of hand and eye—necessary as these are—will ever win a niche in the temple of Fame. This can only be accomplished by the higher qualities of imagination, an unerring recognition of beauty, an ability to choose and refuse the essential and non-essential, commonly called good taste, together with the faculty of realising a psychological value in all Nature's handiwork. Kingsley voiced this last-named gift when he sang,

"I cannot tell what ye say, grey rocks,
I cannot tell what ye say,
But I know that in you a spirit doth dwell
And a word in you this day."

Judged by even this high standard the works of Mr. Algernon Talmage, some of which are reproduced on these pages, will not I think be found wanting. He has the temperament of the true artist, together with the technical accomplishment of the trained craftsman. It is not the outward mask only, but the soul of London that he has tried to capture—the spirit that dwells in the stones of her monuments and temples, her bridges, and even her railway stations, together with her moods, her colour, and the teeming, thronging life of her streets. Every city has a soul. Every European capital is an epitome of the character of the people who built it and who dwell within its walls. The soul of London is the most complex and compelling of them all. It is perpetually revealing unexpected contrasts and beauties. Here is to be found by those who have eyes to see the pathos of St. Petersburg, the gaiety of Paris, the solid splendour of Berlin, the graceful aloofness of Vienna, and even the radiant raggedness of Naples in the soft rays of the electric light. Is any city more beautiful than London at night, when the wet streets and pavements are reflecting a thousand rainbow hues? or on a fine Spring morning, when the parks are in their fresh green robes, and great cumulus clouds rise like guardian angels above its domes and towers? Both these moods are favourite ones with our artist.

"THE GLITTERING STREAM"

BY ALGERNON TALMAGE

Mr. Algernon Talmage's London Pictures

It was about eighteen months ago that Mr. Talmage first came to London to work. He had been painting a picture in Picardy of an avenue near the sleepy Somme that was on the line in the Academy during the following Spring. On his way to the west of England he stayed for a few days near Trafalgar Square. The appeal of his country's capital was irresistible. He left Cornwall and came to London. The few pictures here reproduced represent but a small portion of the result of these eighteen months' continual labour. This can be seen at the Goupil Gallery, where Mr. Talmage is having a "one man's show." The exhibition is well called "London from dawn to midnight," for almost every hour of the twenty-four has been rendered. The colour schemes are very varied. Mr. Talmage feels that a transcript, however faithful, in which everything is not made to contribute to a definite colour scheme, is apt to lack distinction.

It was a big undertaking, this sudden tackling of the turmoil of the Metropolis after the quiet beauty and comparatively unchanging features of the country. Especially, as from the first he avoided those quiet corners and deserted streets which can be interpreted in almost the same spirit and by much the same methods as a pastoral landscape, in which direction he had already achieved considerable success. It was the great soul of London, as I have already indicated, that he wanted to capture—the teeming life of her streets with all its confused colour and movement, the dignity of her buildings, the subtle effects of her atmosphere, the silent glory of her dawns, the vivid beauty of her nights. Fleeting moments every one of them, punctuated by some happy combination of effect and incident. A ray of sunshine, the opening of a theatre's doors, the smoky turmoil of a great terminus, or the dignified façade of some ancient fane touched to glory by a regnant moon, or a beam from a setting sun. And always there is the kaleidoscopic pageant of form and colour, the ceaseless traffic of the street. Motor omnibuses,

"THE HERO'S GUARDS"

(Copyright of the Fine Arts Publishing Co., Ltd.)

BY ALGERNON TALMAGE

(Copyright of the Fine Arts Publishing Co., Ltd.)

"THE GAIETY." BY
ALGERNON TALMAGE

Mr. Algernon Talmage's London Pictures

hansom cabs, brewers' drays, gilded coaches, costers' barrows, and the dark funereal hearse pass in endless succession through the broad thoroughfares, while youth and age, vice and virtue jostle each other on the pavements. The drama of life in a nutshell, but how difficult to capture! That Mr. Talmage has succeeded in doing so, those who see the accompanying illustrations, or go to the Goupil Gallery, will, I think, admit. These truthful and beautiful presentments of London's teeming life will have, in addition to their artistic merit, a rare value in the future when Time's effacing fingers shall have obliterated the customs of to-day and substituted those of to-morrow. What would we not give now for similar records of London life, when dear old Pepys wandered, notebook in hand, or Johnson twitted Goldsmith in the shadow of St. Paul's.

The pictures here reproduced are fairly representative, but do not, of course, reveal their colour with the exception of the one reproduced in colour. The black and white reproduction of St. Martin's gives a good idea of Mr. Talmage's ability. He has chosen a moment of supreme beauty. The cool grey of the church columns makes an exquisite contrast with the warm glow in the Northern sky. This is repeated in a somewhat higher key by the electric lights that are just beginning to glow. These lamps give a festival air to the passing crowd clad in summer garb, from which the graceful silhouette of the hansom cab in no way detracts. The Terminus (see p. 30), is not every man's subject. A row of lamps, a row of cabs, trains, steam, smoke and hurrying people; the whole thing lit up by electric light. Nothing but an aggregate of many impressions reproduced with craftsmanlike skill would make a picture here. The facsimile-monger would be quite out of his depth. For dignity and simplicity of composition The Hero's Guards is, perhaps, the pick of the series. The point of view is particularly well chosen. The fine façade of the National Gallery makes a distinguished background for Landseer's lions. It is at night that this noble square is most impressive, and Mr. Talmage has well expressed its eloquent significance and dignity.

In The Gaiety everything is subordinated to the lamp-lit crowd at the theatre's doors. But the

"FULL SUMMER"

BY ALGERNON TALMAGE

London Pictures

... the church columns makes an
... with the warm glow in the North
... seated in a somewhat high
... that are just beginning
... lamps give a festival air to the place
... rather garb, from which there
... the London cab in no way differ
... (p. 35), is not every man's
... of lamps, a row of cabs, trains, street
... all these people: the whole thing is ... light. Nothing but an aggregation
... scenes reproduced with craftsmanship
... make a picture here. The artist
... could be quite out of his depth. The ... simplicity of composition The Horse
... perhaps, the pick of the series. The
... are well particularly well chosen. The
... of the National Gallery makes a distinct ... background for Landseer's lions. It is at
... that this noble square is most impressive,
... the foliage has well expressed its eloquent
... and dignity.
... the Church everything is subordinated to the ... crowd at the theatre's doors. But the

BY ALGERNON TAINAGE

"ST. MARY-LE-STRAND." FROM THE OIL PAINTING BY ALGERNON TALMAGE.

spa
col in
S in and gr pr

a pr
ce
C n
of 15 tr
th
n

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

"ST. MARTIN'S IN THE FIELDS"

BY ALGERNON TALMAGE

spaciousness of the street and the dignity and fine colour of the buildings, their roof lines almost lost in the purple night, are well portrayed. Full Summer and The Glittering Stream both render in harmonious colour schemes the busy pleasure and the leafy charm of the West End.

A. G. FOLLIOTT STOKES.

THE CHA-NO-YU POTTERY OF JAPAN. BY CHARLES HOLME.

IT has often seemed to me somewhat regrettable that many critics who have written sympathetically about Japanese art, have either ignored or failed to appreciate at their true worth the unpretentious pottery wares made for use in that ceremonious tea function of Japan, known as the Cha-no-yu. The appurtenances of the warrior, his rich armour, his marvellous swords with their wealth of elaborate ornament; the unsurpassable beauty of the works of the great artist-lacquerers and carvers in wood and ivory; the subtle power displayed in the brush strokes of the famous painters, have all met with some measure of justice at the hands of the Western connoisseur. Even the delicate porcelain and richly decorated pottery made for the delectation of the foreigner, have been given a worthy and honourable place in the records of art. Of all the productions of the Japanese craftsman, the one which has passed almost unnoticed—and when noticed, has too often met with unfavourable comment—is that apparently humble and generally unornamented ware which is the subject of this article.

The reason of this neglect is probably due to the very fact of its unpretentiousness and simplicity. It is not, at first sight, of a sufficiently attractive nature to gain the sympathies of the amateur of richly decorated faïence or porcelain. The collector of old "Nankin," or of famille verte or famille rose would scarcely deign to glance a second time at a tea bowl by Kenzan or by Chojiro. Such objects are wanting in daintiness of form and richness of colouring, and in other qualities that appear to some to be essential to the potter's art. And there is probably another reason for the neglect referred to. Fine examples of the pottery of the Cha-no-yu are of great rarity. Made exclusively for the occasional

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

"THE TERMINUS"

(See previous article)

BY ALGERNON TALMAGE

use of a comparatively small section of the community, each individual member of which jealously guarded his own unique treasures, it is but seldom that the outsider has occasion to see, and still more rarely to acquire them. The great value set by Japanese amateurs upon tea jars and tea bowls of certain periods and makes is such as to have caused especial comment by various writers upon Japan as far back as the seventeenth century. The rarity at the present day of genuine examples by the great masters renders it extremely difficult for any collector to amass a representative collection. The difficulty of discriminating between genuine specimens and the numerous forgeries which exist, especially where no examples of the former of any great merit are to be seen in public collections, again acts as a great hindrance to the student in pursuit of information and reliable guides. The Japanese so called expert is not always to be relied upon for exactitude of knowledge or judgment, and is frequently at variance with his compatriots upon some doubtful question. All these difficulties have doubtless prevented Western students from taking up this subject of Cha-no-yu pottery with that enthusiasm which they have devoted to other sections of Japanese art.

The tendency of some writers in dealing with the subject of Japanese pottery, to do so only from a comparative point of view with its relation to the splendid productions of China, while of interest and value, is liable to mislead the student in his efforts to obtain a just appreciation of the subject. For it must never be forgotten, in appraising the acknowledgments due by Japan to China, that the modes of life in the two countries and the resulting requirements of the people have always been somewhat at variance. The potter's patrons in China demanded from the craftsman wares which should fulfil conditions not existing in Japan. The tea clubs which, in Japan, were the centres of æstheticism and the principal patrons of the ceramic art, did not, by their very nature and character, encourage the production of the highly decorative and beautiful manufactures of the sister kingdom; and although it is true that the prototypes of most of the ceramic productions of Japan were produced in China or Corea, the Japanese wares possess characteristics of their own which must have an abiding fascination for those who care to trace the causes which governed their making.

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

The simplicity of the Cha-no-yu pottery is not, as some writers have described it to be, a matter of mere affectation or pretence, for underlying it are some of the soundest principles of art—principles which have governed the production of all forms of construction in the greatest periods of the world's history. Of these principles Utility and Truth are the first essentials. A building, no matter how important or how humble it may be, that does not entirely fill the purpose for which it is required in its greatest and its smallest needs, must be correspondingly imperfect; and one that makes any pretence of being what it is not in any of its features fails in an equal degree in its æsthetic value.

What is true of the higher forms of constructive art is equally true of the less important ones. The essentials of Utility and Truth are applicable to the productions of the workers in wood, metal and clay, as in those of brick and stone; and any departure therefrom can but result in proportionate failure. Inordinate pretension is destructive of all that is best in art. It may please those who are intent only on new experiences and sensations, but it will not stand the test of time and can never be a source of deep and lasting gratification. As we more carefully study the features which distinguish the Cha-no-yu pottery, we find that these essentials of art are carried out within certain limitations, in a most remarkable degree.

It is impossible to say what were the precise regulations which the masters of the cult formulated for the observance of the potter, as they, doubtless, varied according to the individual views held by them, but we know sufficiently of the main tenour of their ideas to enable us to perceive that all that was false and meretricious was rigidly tabooed, and that the result of their efforts accorded entirely with the most severe of Western conventions.

Let us take as an illustration of this point, the tea bowls of the Chojiro family, commonly known as Raku ware. I do so because, in the first place, this ware has been regarded in Japan as one of the most thoroughly satisfactory ones used in the tea ceremony; and secondly, because it has probably been less understood and more completely vilified in the West than any other class of Japanese ceramics. The bowl or cha-wan is a most important item in the function. In it the powdered tea is thrown and well mixed, by the aid of a little bamboo whisk, with hot water. It is then passed round by the guests to each other with some show of ritual after the manner of a loving cup at a Lord Mayor's feast.

Chojiro lived in the sixteenth century in the days of Hideyoshi, who was a great patron of the cult of the Cha-no-yu, and who presented to the potter a gold seal in token of his appreciation of the ware produced by him. The same class of ware with slight variations has been made by eleven successive generations of potters up to the present day. The example to which I would now draw detailed attention is by Doniu or Nonko, the grandson of Chojiro, who died A.D. 1657 (Fig. 1, p. 32). It is modelled in a brown clay entirely by hand without the aid of a potter's wheel. The impressions of the fingers made in shaping the bowl are carefully retained. The clay is coarse and soft and the walls of the vessel are therefore rather thick, but become much thinner towards the rim, which is slightly inclined inwards. The whole is covered with a heavy glaze, apparently black when first seen but after close examination found to be translucent, with many shades of red, green and yellow appearing below the surface. Spots of varying size are left in irregular positions outside the bowl in which the clay body is uncovered by the glaze. The seal "Raku" is impressed at the bottom of the vessel. Before examining it in detail most amateurs would find it to be a somewhat unpromising looking object, and even after such an examination would still condemn it as unattractive. And yet this bowl with others of similar character has received the highest measure of praise from those leaders of taste who represented the innate spirit which controlled so much of what is best and purest in Japanese art. Wherein lies its art? In the first place by fulfilling satisfactorily the purpose for which it is made. Its soft, coarse clay is a non-conductor of heat and allows it to be clasped with comfort by the fingers although it be filled with hot tea; its heavy glaze protects the porous clay from contamination by the tea; its shape enables it to be held securely and passed from one person to another without fear of spilling the contained liquor. In the second place, its art is displayed in the evidences which it bears of the human element which conceived and produced it—in the fingering of the body, in the knowledge with which the glaze has been applied, in the care which has been taken to reserve some portion of the clay free for examination; and, finally, in its unpretentiousness, in its frank avowal of subordination, in the open admission of its humble origin. In the days of the great Hideyoshi, when war was rife, when luxury was rampant, the tea ceremony was cultivated as a foil to and as a protest against the evil tendencies of the time, and was the means by which the minds of those taking part in it might be turned from the clash of arms, from the display of wealth, and inclined towards the elevating influences of pure æstheticism ; and it was fitting that all the adjuncts to the ceremony should be so formed as to be conducive to that end.

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

Rikiu, the founder of the most popular school of Cha-no-yu, being quizzed upon the supposed elaborate secrets of the ceremony, is stated to have replied,* "Well, there is no particular secret in the ceremony save in making tea agreeable to the palate, in piling charcoal on the brazier so as to make a good fire for boiling the water, in arranging flowers in a natural way and in making things cool in summer and warm in winter." Somewhat disappointed with the apparently commonplace explanation, the enquirer said, "Who on earth does not know how to do that?" Rikiu's happy retort was, "Well, if you know it, do it."

The main influence at work in the foundation of the tea ceremony was of a religious nature. The teaching of Laotze, a contemporary of Confucius, and the influence of Zenism—a branch of Buddhism in which is incorporated much of the spirit of the Laotze philosophy—are largely responsible for the characteristics which signalise every detail of the ceremony. They had, in the thirteenth century and onwards, a potent influence on the thoughts and, indeed, on the very life of the Japanese nation—an influence of so beneficent a character that it may truly be said that its purest ideals may be traced directly thereto. Luxury was turned to refinement, the abasement of self was taught as the highest virtue, simplicity as its chief charm. Laws of art were derived from a close study of the life of nature, and an intimate sympathy with it in all its phases. The ideals of the painter and the poet were filled with Romanticism in its purest and most elevating form—in its exaltation of spirit above mere naturalism. Never, perhaps, in the world's history had the doctrine of high thought and simple living become so materialised as under the influence of that cult.

The tea-room, following the rules laid down by the masters, was extremely small and most unpretentious in character. But every detail in its least particular was planned with the greatest care. Okakura-Kakuzo in his charming "Book of Tea" says: "Even in the daytime the light of the room is subdued, for the low eaves of the slanting roof admit but few of the sun's rays. Everything is sober in tint from the ceiling to the floor; the guests themselves have carefully chosen garments of unobtrusive colours. The mellowness of age is over all, everything suggestive of recent acquirement being tabooed save only the one note of contrast furnished by the bamboo dipper and the linen napkin, both immaculately white and new. However faded the tea-room and the tea equipage may seem, everything is absolutely clean. Not a particle of dust will be found in the darkest corner, for if any exists, the host is not a tea master. . . . Rikiu was watching his son Shoan as he swept and watered the garden path. 'Not clean enough,' said Rikiu, when Shoan had finished his task, and bade him try again. After a weary hour the son hurried to Rikiu: 'Father, there is nothing more to be done. The steps have been washed for the third time, the stone lanterns and the trees are well sprinkled with water, moss and lichens are shining with the fresh verdure; not a twig, not a leaf have I left on the ground.' 'Young fool,' chides the tea master, 'that is not the way a garden path should be swept.' Saying this, Rikiu stepped into the garden, shook a tree, scattered over the garden gold and crimson leaves, scraps of the brocade of autumn. What Rikiu demanded was not cleanliness alone but the beautiful and natural also."

In our investigations of the characteristics of the pottery utensils which played so important a part in this ceremony, it is necessary for us continually to bear in mind the spirit of simplicity which

FIG. 1. TEA BOWL, RAKU WARE, BY DONIU

* Prof. Takashima Steta in "The Far East."

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

controlled the function in its every detail, and to remember that no single portion of its ritual, no detail of its accessories, is too insignificant to pass unnoticed.

One of the characteristics which first strike the observer is the absence of painted decoration on the great majority of examples which come before him. But, occasionally, a water jar or a tea bowl is found with an inscription upon it, or a few touches of colour suggestive of bird or plant-life. It may easily be understood, however, that an elaborately decorated piece of pottery would be entirely out of place in a room in which everything was reduced to its simplest form; one slight sketch to hang in the recess, one vase of flowers simply and naturally arranged, forming the sole ornamentation. And it is doubtful if the painter's art when applied to pottery does not to a certain extent clash with the qualities which rightly belong to the potter's craft. Painter's work is not essential to the completion of a perfect piece of pottery. It adds nothing to its use, and, unless it be subordinate, rather detracts from the interest attaching to those methods of manufacture in which the truest art of the potter lies. The charm of Cha-no-yu pottery must be found in those details essentially necessary to its production. We have seen how in the tea bowl by Doniu the chief items of interest are its form and the nature of the clay of which it is made and of the glaze with which it is covered. The same observations apply to wares of old Seto, of Hagi, of Shigaraki, of Iga, of Ohi, of Karatsu, of Tamba, and of numerous other centres in which Cha-no-yu wares were produced. But the astonishing thing is, that in spite of the common absence of applied decoration, individuality may be traced in almost every example we take in hand. Differences in the character of the clay, differences in form or in the treatment of the enamelled glazes continually strike us. Our interest in such details is awakened and certain subtleties in one or other of the potter's operations which are not at first apparent become after a time more readily distinguishable. We begin to appreciate the curious coarse material employed sometimes by the Shigaraki potters in which little particles of quartz sand are embedded, the hard fine stoneware of Bizen, the beautifully-prepared material of the Seto potters, or the red and grey varieties of Satsuma earthenware. We are able to distinguish the varied methods by which the potter loved to show his individuality in the shaping of the vessel on the wheel, or by hand, or with the spatula, either separately or in combination, and the quaint conceits of form in which he sometimes would delight and by means of which he was able to express his genius as surely and as clearly as the painter might do by his brush-work.

FIG. 2. TEA BOWL, MATSUMOTO, HAGI WARE

FIG. 3. TEA BOWL, HAGI WARE

The varied secrets of the craft reveal themselves to us in the beauties of glazing, in the rich depths of colour, and the play of lights, obtainable only by the intimate acquaintance with the final operations of firing. The subtle varieties which distinguish the work of the numerous makers of tea jars (cha-tsubo) of Seto from the first Toshiro downward to the present day, are closely studied by amateurs in Japan, and various treatises have been written and profusely illustrated by them in which minor differences are discovered, carrying the art into realms not likely to be often explored by the Western connoisseur. The slight but suggestive decoration which was applied by Ninsei, Kenzan, Rokubei and other great potters, although contrary to the principles of the more severe masters of the cult, were permitted and even welcomed by others, and in their very reticence are productive of much æsthetic deduction.

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

Enshiu, a great master of the tea ceremony, was, as related by Okakura, "complimented by his disciples on the admirable taste he had displayed in the choice of his collection." Said they: "Each piece is such that no one could help admiring. It shows that you had better taste than had Rikiu, for his collection could only be appreciated by one in a thousand!" Sorrowfully Enshiu replied: "This only proves how commonplace I am. The great Rikiu dared to love only the objects which personally appealed to him, whereas I, unconsciously, cater to the tastes of the majority. Verily Rikiu was one in a thousand among tea masters!"

Among the simple, undecorated wares especially valued by the tea clubs was one known as Hagi, from the chief town in the province of Nagato. The first ware of importance was made at Matsumoto, in late sixteenth or early seventeenth century, in imitation of Corean ware. It has a pearl-grey craquelé glaze of a milky appearance, essentially characteristic of its prototype. (Fig. 2.) Kilns were afterwards opened in other parts of the province, and the colour of the glazes became varied in character, such as pale green, light lavender, cream white, and buff to brown. To the Western connoisseur its chief interest lies in the remarkable variety and beauty of its crackle. The variety is doubtless due to the varying thickness of the glaze employed; the heavier the glaze, the coarser becomes the crackle, and as the body of the glaze frequently varies in one object, so the crackle will be found to be proportionately coarse or fine. In order to produce regularity of crackle, a most careful manipulation of the cooling process in the kiln is necessary. What its precise nature may be is a matter of doubt and some discussion, but it is certain that no Western potter has been able to produce it with that uniformity of interlacement and perfection of finish which his confrère in the East achieved. A typical example of craquelé Hagi ware is shown in Fig. 3 on the preceding page.

Of the delightful combinations of colour to be met with in the glazes of bowls, jars and water

FIG. 5. WATER JAR, TAKATORI WARE

FIG. 4. TEA BOWL, OHI WARE

pots it would take a bulky volume to treat in detail. I will mention only a few by way of example.

In the province of Kaga towards the latter half of the seventeenth century, a Kyoto potter settled in Ohimachi taking the name of Ohi. The pottery made by him and his successors has a soft paste, and is fashioned very much after the Raku style. The colour of its glaze is a rich, warm, translucent brown, simulating that of brown Chinese amber. In some of the earliest pieces there appear within the glaze brilliant sparks of golden light, as seen in Aventurine; but after careful examination these sparks seem to have been caused, not as in the case of Aventurine by tiny plates of mica, but by little fissures within the glaze, which, catching the light at certain angles, reflect it as in the case of the opal. The effect is still further heightened when the brown glaze is run over a dull black glaze. It has altogether

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 6. TEA JAR, ZEZE WARE

a most unusual appearance and one which is well worth the close consideration of the practical potter. (Fig. 4.)

Perhaps some of the most fascinating effects of glazing are found in Takatori and Zeze productions. The finest examples of Takatori date from the seventeenth century, and are distinguished by the light grey or mouse-coloured quality of its clay, which is both fine and hard in texture.

The large Midzu-sashi or water jar from the Takatori kiln, reproduced in Fig. 5, is remarkable for the beautiful translucent, mottled red of its glaze, and the soft green of its running down over-glaze.

Other examples exhibit the most tender effects of light and dark browns, to which many poetic titles have been applied by appreciative Cha-jin.

The old Zeze productions are scarcely less beautiful. Tender russet browns, purples and golden yellows applied with the greatest delicacy and knowledge, rival the finest productions of the Chinese kilns. The little cha-tsubo (tea jar) here shown (Fig. 6) is remarkable for its brownish purple glaze shading into black upon a fine brown p  te and is a typical example of Zeze-yaki. The manner in which the vase is modelled in irregular ridges is of value not only for the security which it gives in handling but also in affording the glaze an opportunity of settling in an irregular manner upon the body and so displaying a broken effect of colour. In this little jar is also noticeable the successful application of "iron dust" glaze, copied from earlier Chinese productions.

The great variety of effects in plain and coloured glazes obtained by the Satsuma potters is a matter of astonishment to all those whose idea of Satsuma-yaki is the decorated cream-coloured ware which is generally so falsely ascribed to that province. That cream-coloured glazes of great beauty were applied in Satsuma is undoubtedly true, but of their exact nature less is generally known than is desirable. A mere representation or description of the ware is insufficient to enable the student to verify it. He must actually examine and handle it—he must closely observe its ivory-like glaze and minute crackle, he must feel upon his cheek the soft, caressing touch of its surface than which there is nothing else quite the same. (Fig. 7.) Let him beware of decorated examples, because even when genuine (and that is extremely rare), the beauty of the glaze has to a very important degree been lost in the re-firing necessary for the fixing of the orn  mental detail. Finely decorated Satsuma-yaki may be considered to be very beautiful from a Western point of view, but probably only the

FIG. 7. TEA BOWL, SATSUMA WARE

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 8. TEA BOWL, SETO-GUSURI SATSUMA

FIG. 9. TEA JAR, SETO-GUSURI SATSUMA

Many other varieties of Satsuma are enumerated, both in plain and multi-coloured glazes, which cannot be here referred to in detail.

Of the true Seto pottery volumes have been written as already stated, and still more might be written. But I shall confine my remarks to a few examples only, two of which here shown date from the thirteenth century, and are reputed to be the work of the great Toshiro. (Figs. 12 and 13.)

Toshiro has been rightly called the father of Japanese Ceramics, for although there are records of the existence of pottery kilns in Japan as far back as the tenth century, still it was his work and his influence that raised the craft to the high status that it has now held in Japan for nearly seven centuries. Kato Shirozaemon, to give him his full name, journeyed to China in 1223, where he spent six years in acquiring the secrets of the production most liberal, if any, of the votaries of tea would permit of its use in the ceremony.

FIG. 10. TEA BOWL, TORAFU SATSUMA

Of the polychromatic glazes to which I would especially call attention, Seto-gusuri or "Seto glaze," is the one most generally known. (Figs. 8 and 9.) Although called after the Seto pottery it possesses several points of difference. The Satsuma browns are of a greener cast than the Seto ones and are usually flecked with splashes of light blue or white. There is a special kind known as Torafu or "Tiger skin" (Fig. 10), which consists of a greenish brown glaze running over one of a yellowish tint, and another one, Bekko-gusuri or "Tortoise-shell glaze," in which much richer yellows and browns are employed. (Fig. 11.)

FIG. 11. TEA BOWL, BEKKO-GUSURI SATSUMA

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 12. TEA JAR, BY TOSHIRO

of glazed pottery. Upon his return he settled in Seto, where suitable earth was to be found in abundance for his purpose. So highly is he esteemed in the land of his birth that a temple has been erected to his memory, where festivals are held in his honour twice a year. The clay employed by him was of a brown colour, and was somewhat rough from the admixture within it of siliceous grit. The glazes were dark brown broken in tint with lighter shades. His work has served as models to all his succeeding generations. Its simplicity and perfection of workmanship appealed strongly to the members of the tea clubs, who collected and preserved examples with the greatest care, so that at this long distance from the date of their production many pieces are still treasured in most excellent condition.

Of the various masters of the tea ceremony who seem to have made their individuality felt in the productions of the Seto kilns, Furuta Oribe and Shino Ienobu are among the most notable. It is related that a kiln was erected in the latter end of the sixteenth century at Narumi, in Owari, at which Oribe superintended the making of sixty-six cha-tsubo of great excellence, to which the term Oribe-yaki was first applied, and that the making of wares from that time in that kiln always bore the name of the great Cha-jin. In the little tea jar shown overleaf, which is supposed to have been produced under his influence, some novel and interesting features are observable. (Fig. 14) It is apparently modelled entirely by hand, the little fingered indentations in the side being of value in arresting the uniform flow of the glaze. It is made of a dark brown earth covered with a yellowish opaque glaze, over which a transparent blue glaze is run. In the thinner portion of the over-glaze, the yellow under-glaze shows through and produces a pleasant green effect, the blue displaying its natural colour only when the glaze is sufficiently heavy to hide entirely the yellow under-glaze. Two small Kogo or perfume boxes are also shown (Figs. 15 and 16), both of which are entirely modelled by hand, the under-glaze being crackled and the mon displayed in varying forms.

FIG. 13. TEA JAR, BY TOSHIRO

Shino, a Cha-jin of considerable celebrity, was under the patronage of the great Yoshimasa towards the end of the fifteenth century. The wares made under his direction are greatly valued by connoisseurs of tea utensils, and possess certain characteristics of remarkable originality. The large hot-water pitcher (yukwan) figured on the next page (Fig. 17) exhibits some of the special features of the productions attributed to his influence. In criticising its form it must be remembered that its essential purpose is to hold hot water, to keep it hot, and to permit it to be easily poured out when required. As in Raku ware, a coarse earth has been selected which is an efficient non-conductor of heat. The heavy glazing inside and out is necessary to render it non-porous. Extra strength in proportion to the weight of the pot and its contents was requisite in the handle, and is duly, but not excessively, provided for. I think the examination of such a vessel as this is of value to enable us to gauge the standard of what was considered by the Cha-jin to be in correct taste. Their judgment on this matter is, in my opinion, entirely supported by the most correct and refined laws of constructive art, although it is more than probable that no potter in this country would dream of imitating it for use in an English drawing-room.

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 14. TEA JAR, ORIBÉ WARE

FIG. 15. PERFUME BOX, ORIBÉ WARE

Although in this short article I must of necessity pass over the names of many makes and makers of Cha-no-yu pottery which are in much repute, I cannot omit some mention of the great potters, Kenzan and Ninsei. In dealing with their work, we come near to the confines of legitimacy as laid down in the canons of art of the Cha-jin. It may be that to such severe masters as Rikiu some of the productions of these potters would be unacceptable; and yet they were both capable of entering into the pure spirit of Cha-no-yu and producing wares delightful to its votaries, if required to do so. "Not to depict but to suggest" was the effort of some of Japan's greatest artists, and "ornament is not necessarily art" was an axiom thoroughly understood by her greatest craftsmen.

FIG. 16. PERFUME BOX, ORIBÉ WARE

The right spirit of Cha-no-yu is superbly presented by Kenzan in the Raku bowl here shown (Fig. 18). Simple in form like the bowls of Chojiro and his successors, it is covered with an iridescent pink

FIG. 17. HOT WATER PITCHER, SHINO WARE

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

glaze, which presents many qualities of beauty worthy of close attention. The inscription in white slip—its only ornament—when translated reads:—

“ One sip of the tea,
One touch of the hand
Will bring renewed life.
Kenzan copies this.”

Especial charm lies in the modesty of the last line. In it the potter frankly admits that the character to be endowed with. Kenzan had many followers who produced excellent work on the lines of the master, but none of them reached the high level of his own genius.

To Ninsei, as well as to Kenzan, Japan owes a profound debt of gratitude. Others were content to copy the features of the productions of China and Corea, but Ninsei and Kenzan opened an era of prosperity to their co-workers by suggesting to them new paths which would lead them to a truer national expression of their art. Both masters visited various centres of pottery industry in Japan and there laboured among their fellow craftsmen, kindling enthusiasm wherever they went. Several important kilns were opened by Ninsei's students in Kioto and elsewhere, and for many years work of a high standard was produced in them.

The little flower vase shown in Fig. 20 bears the mark of one of these kilns, known as “Mizoro,” and seems to exhibit a strong impress of the master's influence. Several small pieces stamped with the Ninsei signature are also shown (Figs. 21 to 24), two being cha-wan of dissimilar character; a third, a kogo, shaped as Fujiyama and with some small figures painted in the Tosa style; a fourth a cha-tsubo with diaper ornament.

These few examples can give but a faint idea of the genius of this great potter. Many hundreds of pieces would be necessary to enable one to gauge it with reasonable exactitude; but it will be noticed that in each and every case the potting and the glazing are faultless while the decoration is unpretentious. Ninsei, of the ware is not his own invention—that to others must be given the credit of its excellences; but that he has added a new charm to the object in its poetic inscription is evident. No man was better able to afford an admission of acknowledgment to others than Kenzan, for he was himself full of original ideas as to the methods of ceramic production and of its decorative detail.

As an example of Kenzan's decorated work, the cha-wan (Fig. 19), from the unique collection formed by Mr. Frank Brangwyn, is in all respects most typical. The convention adopted by Kenzan and the supreme art by which he expressed it make every object from his hand a lasting joy to those who are able to perceive somewhat of the message which was his to convey—“Not to depict but to suggest”—and to suggest with that consummate, innate knowledge of the possibilities, the limitations, the purposes of decorative art which it is given only to the few

FIG. 18. TEA BOWL, RAKU WARE, BY KENZAN

FIG. 19. TEA BOWL, BY KENZAN
(Brangwyn Collection)

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 20. FLOWER VASE, MIZORO WARE one object may be seen by an examination of the small bowl by Hozen of Kioto (Fig. 25). The earth employed is dark brown in colour in which are small particles of white silica. The exterior is partly covered with brown glaze through which the earth is seen in numberless uncovered specks. Over the interior and upper portion of the exterior is run a thick cream-coloured glaze, rather coarsely crackled with great regularity, the cracks being filled with a black stain. Upon the outside portion of this bowl is a simple design in blue and brown to suggest a flight of ducks over water and reeds. Like other examples of Cha-no-yu pottery, its general appearance is one of extreme modesty, and it is it appears to me after careful examination of some choice examples in several notable collections, had a dainty imagination, but less power and originality in his decorative schemes than Kenzan, while, as a potter, he was conversant with every known method of potting, and was second to none in the perfection of his work. In consequence of the large number of forgeries bearing the mark Ninsei, mistaken impressions of the master's productions are frequent, and it is not possible to give any hard-and-fast rule for the guidance of collectors. There is, however, a distinction in the work of all men of genius which, in ordinary circumstances, prevents it from being confounded with that of lesser lights.

FIG. 21. TEA JAR, BY NINSEI

The diversity of interest that may be found at times in

FIG. 22. PERFUME BOX, BY NINSEI

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIGS. 23 AND 24. TEA BOWLS, BY NINSEI

only after close scrutiny that its many excellences are recognised.

Indeed, it is exactly for this reason I wish to draw attention to it. Brilliantly coloured, showily decorated pottery could not be tolerated for one moment in a Japanese tea ceremony, but the preferences of the Cha-iin were such as to prove that æsthetic value might still be attained even when accompanied by the utmost sobriety.

There is a curious mark, a sort of brush smear, which appears occasionally upon objects of Cha-no-yu pottery and which evidently met with the approbation of the tea-clubs. This hakima, or brush mark, appears on one of the Ninsei bowls, on a Yatsushiro bowl (Fig. 27), and on an unsigned dish of irregular form, probably by Rokubei (Fig. 26). To call this mark a species of decoration would probably be resented by some—and yet I think it may have been looked upon as such by tea votaries. The use of the brush in writing in Japan and China is universal. Good writing is distinguished from bad by the power and ability with which the brush is handled by the writer. A piece of fine calligraphy displayed in Kakimono form was in especial favour at a tea function, and was judged to be equal, if not superior, in artistic interest to a drawing by a great painter. The brush is used by a potter in applying over-glaze or slip as well as in painting, and the cleverness with which the brush is directed naturally lends additional interest to the results. It would be quite legitimate for the brush-work of the potter to have an artistic value as well as that of the writer, and this evidently was considered to be the case from the manner in which it was frequently applied.

There is a kind of slip decoration very much favoured by Yatsushiro, Satsuma, and other potters, known as Mishima, and originally of Corean introduction. Small patterns are stamped in the dark clay body before it is fired, and a white clay slip is run into the depression, so that when stoved the design appears white upon a grey or brown ground. The slip is usually applied with a brush, and is afterwards scraped away from the spaces between the indented patterns. To avoid the mechanical effect caused by a too careful finish, such as is often seen in modern Yatsushiro examples, the slip, by some potters, was only partially rubbed away from the plain surface, bands of brush work being left untouched between the patterns, as seen in one of the bowls reproduced (Fig. 28). In other cases, the pattern is omitted altogether, the brush-work being applied alone and fired without further operation. One observes in the varieties of this class of decoration an effort on the part of the potters working for the Cha-jin to avoid anything approaching machine-like perfection. They did not desire to hide the method

FIG. 25. TEA BOWL, BY HOZEN

The Cha-no-yu Pottery of Japan

FIG. 26. CAKE-DISH, HAKIMA DECORATION

FIG. 27. TEA BOWL, MISHIMA DECORATION, YATSUSHIRO WARE

of operation, but rather to retain and to show in the frankest possible manner every detail of manipulation. The brush stroke might, in some cases, be a tour de force beyond the powers of the average potter to imitate; but, be this as it may, it is certain that the result obtained has a distinct artistic charm which is altogether absent from mechanically finished pottery, no matter how expensive or elaborate may have been its manner of production and decoration.

To rightly gauge the true value of Cha-no-yu pottery, one must endeavour to put oneself in the frame of mind which was judged to be the correct attitude of participants in the ceremony. The teachings of the philosopher Laotze, as set forth in his great work, "The Book of the Simple Way," inculcate the advantages of simplicity, of gentleness, of humility. "As for you, do you come forth in your natural simplicity, lay hold on verities, restrain selfishness, and rid yourselves of ambition." "He who is content can never be ruined." "To remain gentle is to be invincible." "Hold fast to three precious things; the first is gentleness, the second economy, the third humility," are a few of his sayings culled at random from Mr. Walter Old's translation. Boasting, display of wealth, self-assertiveness, were of all things the most intolerable. In approaching the tea room, the mind must be freed from all troubles, from anxieties, from ambitions, and be open to receive and to record the lightest impressions. Small wonder is it, therefore, that the appurtenances of the ceremony were without ostentation. But even if unassuming, they were not consequently devoid of interest. They were not the outcome of the 'prentice-hand and the tyro. They were not faulty in construction, not commonplace, not machine-made, not inadequate. On the contrary, they were the productions of master-craftsmen, and preserved in themselves many mysteries of workmanship undiscovered in modern times. They were made to fulfil certain requirements, and succeeded in their purpose far more completely than do the general products of the art of to-day. The precepts of Laotze are as beautiful and as valuable now as they were when they were written, two thousand four hundred years ago, and they still survive in the writings and teachings of some modern sages; but in their practical observance we seem to be in these times of unrest as indifferent as of yore. Power of conquest, the strife for wealth and position are as universal as ever they were, and the true significance of the Simple Way, and with it, the Soul of Art, is unsought and unknown to the larger mass of humanity. Art does not exist alone for the wealthy and great ones of the earth. It may sometimes be found in the simplest home, in the unpretentious endeavours of earnest and of humble folk. The old Zen priests and Cha-jin were mindful of these things and alive to the evil of ostentation; and, by means of the

FIG. 28. TEA BOWL, MISHIMA DECORATION, YATSUSHIRO WARE

"THE TOWN HALL, PETERBOROUGH." FROM
THE TINTED DRAWING BY A. HENRY FULLWOOD.

The Artistic Treatment of Architectural Drawings—Pen Drawing

Tea Ceremony, tried to lure back to the true path the erring pilgrims.

Of their righteous efforts, but little remains. The Tea Ceremony is almost a thing of the past. The charming reunions in the cause of high thought and simple manners linger alone among a very few devotees and lovers of ancient custom. It may be that in the period of its decadence the spirit of its founders was veiled and the precepts of its teachers relaxed and subordinated to less admirable ends. But the good work done under its protecting wing still animates the creations of certain craftsmen, and even the ceramic productions of modern Europe are not without signs of its influence.

The pottery of the Cha-no-yu is among things Japanese the most to be cherished, because it affords supreme evidence that the pure Spirit of Art may enter into and render precious the most humble of man's creations.

A NOTE ON THE ARTISTIC TREATMENT OF ARCHITECTURAL DRAWINGS.

It is surprising what a number of architectural drawings—especially perspectives—are spoiled for want of artistic treatment, by bad judgment in the management of light and shade, figures drawn badly and out of scale, impossible trees and general accessories all wrong. Some architects, whose work is otherwise splendid, will put in absurd little figures, apparently with an idea to enhance the height of their buildings. And when the building is completed, one often notices a chance natural effect of light and shade, whereas, had the perspective been drawn by an artist familiar with these effects, a fine result would have been obtained as well as a drawing worth keeping as a work of art.

Special "features" of a building often require prominence, and this can only be done by keeping the surroundings quiet; but only an artist will understand how to do this. One has only to see the exhibition of architectural drawings at the Academy any year to see how insipid and wanting in artistic treatment most of the perspectives appear. The general average is "stodgy," with what is known as the "Academy treatment." There are a few architects who treat drawings very finely, but they are the rare exceptions. It seems a pity that many excellent designs are spoiled or fail to have justice done to them for want of artistic management. Architects generally suppose that an artist would spoil their details, but this is not so where proper judgment is considered and an artist of proved ability given the work to do.

A. HENRY FULLWOOD.

PEN DRAWING, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO A RECENT "STUDIO" COMPETITION.

AMONG the modes of technical expression which are available for the artist's use, a place of much distinction has always been given to drawing with the pen—and deservedly given, because in the right management of pure pen line there are

PEN DRAWING

BY "TREVENA"

PEN DRAWING
BY "HEMBEE"

Pen Drawing

PEN DRAWING

BY "THANET"

certain difficulties, not to be evaded, which test with some severity the draughtsman's knowledge of his craft. To overcome these difficulties more than mere skill of hand is necessary a definite degree of intelligence must be exercised, and distinctive faculties of observation and analysis must be brought into play. The beauty of line drawing depends to a very great extent upon the expressiveness of the line itself, upon its significance as a means of stating the facts of the subject illustrated, and upon the sensitiveness with which it suggests the vital matters by which this subject is explained. When a pen drawing is distinguished by this expressiveness and, as well, by delicacy and vitality of handling, it becomes a work of art which can be

PEN DRAWING: "THE WHITE LION INN, OUNDLE"

BY "ROATH"

Pen Drawing

frankly commended as an achievement of real importance and entirely worthy of serious consideration.

But to reach this level of achievement the draughtsman must be prepared to study closely both the possibilities and the limitations of a technical process which cannot be properly controlled until the ways in which it can be applied are fully understood. One of the chief lessons that has to be learned is the advantage of simplicity; and this is not only the first lesson to be mastered, but the one upon which almost everything else depends. In pen drawing laborious elaboration and painstaking effort to arrive at superficial completeness are entirely undesirable. By toiling to produce tone effects which can be much more convincingly represented with the brush than with the pen, by attempting subtleties of light and shade which can be better suggested by means of a wash than by the superimposing of lines on lines, the draughtsman is not only wasting his time but he is, to a not inconsiderable degree, departing from the true genius of this branch of art practice. He can arrive at much more credible results by suppressing his desire for realism and by recognising the nature of the technical convention which he is bound to observe.

For the purpose of this convention is to create a sort of optical illusion—the line drawing of the best type is not, and never can be, an actual rendering of nature, but it can convey a strong impression of actuality if it is treated with the right measure of suggestion. It deceives the eye, in fact, into the belief that a comparatively brief summary is a full statement of complex detail and a correct representation of things as they are rather than a purely arbitrary adaptation of realities; and it is by the success of this deception that the extent of the draughtsman's ability can be estimated.

Obviously, the creation of a sufficiently convincing illusion is within the reach of only those artists who know exactly what they want to suggest, and how, with the means at their disposal, this suggestion can be made intelligible. The line drawing from which an impression of completeness is to be obtained needs to be set down with absolute confidence, with frank directness and freshness of manner. It must not be laboured and it must not concern itself with trivialities or unessentials, or, indeed, with anything else that might tend to obscure the clearness of its meaning. Any

PEN DRAWING

BY "VOYAGEUR"

"WESTMINSTER ABBEY." PEN DRAWING BY "BLACK SPOT"

Pen Drawing

departure from judicious simplicity weakens the illusion by introducing an element of uncertainty as to the artist's intention and by giving justification for the suspicion that he is trying to conceal his own want of thorough knowledge under an affectation of elaborate study.

The kind of study that is most necessary for the draughtsman is that which best enables him to appreciate the value of conciseness and teaches him the vital importance of directness of method—which leads him certainly to an understanding of the reason why a simple manner of working will give the most significant results. If he looks at his art from the right point of view he will see that in its very limitations there is something stimulating to his powers of invention and to his desire to obtain a mastery over the means of expression which are available for him. He will see how much he must know if his drawings are to have the qualities by which alone they can be made rightly persuasive, and, seeing this, he will be induced to train himself thoroughly for the work he has undertaken, for fear he should by fumbling or hesitation show that he is attempting more than he is capable of carrying out.

Indeed, in a draughtsman's work there is an inevitable revelation of the weak points in his equipment. The simple line admits of no disguise; either it is satisfying in its expressive suggestion or it is disappointing because it shows uncertainty, indecision, and imperfect perception of the uses to which it should be put. If it is not set down decisively at the outset no amount of tinkering with it will avail to correct its inefficiencies, and the more it is worried the greater will be the display of its inherent weakness. Therefore, that man only can consider himself well equipped as a draughtsman in line who has so taught himself to observe and analyse the subjects with which he deals that by the most summary methods he can make perfectly plain all that is in his mind.

This, of course, means that he must have acquired a full insight into the subtleties of artistic practice. If he has not learned all that there is to be known about refinements of form and modulations of tone, he cannot tell which of the facts before him he must retain and which it will be permissible to leave out; nor without the fullest experience can he be sure how to reduce the complexities he sees to the simplicity of a fine drawing without missing anything that should be included in his statement. With a single line, or at most with half-a-dozen lines, he has to create an illusion of exquisitely varied contours and delicately related modellings, and he has even to suggest gradations of colour if his subject is one that needs a hint of colour to increase its interest. It is here that the test comes of his powers—a test that need not be feared by the man who has properly prepared

PEN DRAWING

BY "DOORMAT"

PEN DRAWING

BY "PAN"

PEN DRAWING: "THE BEGUINAGE, BRUGES"

BY "DEVONIA"

Pen Drawing

PEN DRAWING

BY "SMOKE"

himself for his work, but one that is merciless in its exposure of the student who has shirked his responsibilities.

When there is this basis of thorough study to go upon, a fascinating quality can be given to the pen drawing. It acquires a delightful sensitiveness and flexibility of line, an expressive delicacy of touch, and an intimacy of suggestion by what seem to be the simplest of technical devices; and it gains just that note of confidence which is needed to make the artist's intentions perfectly intelligible. Nothing is exaggerated, nothing is out of relation, and nothing spoils the impression of masterly simplicity which results from the draughtsman's skilful elimination of everything that does not help to complete his work. There is no affectation of cleverness and no trickery, but there is instead the quiet certainty of the man who knows his craft and who has formed his style by schooling himself in the right principles.

The drawings which are reproduced here are well worthy of attention as examples of the way in which the pen can be made to serve effectively the artist's purpose. They have been selected from a large series sent in for competition, and in their variety of manner and their quality of achievement they give a good idea of the general character of the work for which the competitors have been responsible. The series, as a whole, shows that there is a very wide understanding of the principles which should be followed in legitimate pen drawing, and that a number of people study and apply these principles with thorough intelligence and no lack of technical skill. Several of the drawings, indeed, have merits of a high order and can be accepted as quite adequate illustrations of the best kind of line work, and many others, which have deficiencies due to inexperience only, can be sincerely commended for their adherence to sound traditions and for their correctness of method.

For example, the drawing of an old mill by "Hembee" is exceptionally satisfactory in its frank and intelligent treatment. Freedom from affectation and avoidance of anything like artificiality are not the least of its merits; and among them, too, must be counted its excellent light and shade arrangement. The study by "Trevena," less deliberately picturesque and less obviously effective, has again agreeable qualities of line and a purity of method that claims respect;

its delicate precision, which is not carried to any excess of formality, gives to it a breadth of effect that is distinctly pleasing. "Roath's" careful, formal,

PEN DRAWING

BY "TEDDIE"

Pen Drawing

PEN DRAWING

BY "MOPS"

and studied rendering of the White Lion Inn, at Oundle, is not less interesting as an example of quite a different manner of handling. This last drawing is architectural rather than pictorial, a statement of facts without disguise, but yet it is not blankly realistic and it does not sacrifice technical refinements for the sake of attaining an excessive actuality. It shows a firm sense of construction and is pleasantly restrained.

A robuster style is seen in the sketch by "Thanet,"

PEN DRAWING

BY "SALWARPE COURT"

PEN DRAWING: "A SHOP IN BRITTANY" BY "KATE"

which attempts no record of the details of a building, but aims rather at suggesting an effect of sunlight. In this sketch the line is looser and more careless, but the carelessness is intentional and not a consequence of want of thought. As a study of illumination this particular example decidedly deserves to be noted—it shows one of the ways in which pen work can be turned to excellent account. In "Voyageur's" note of a quaint bit in a foreign street there is cleverness of execution with, perhaps, a little too much disregard of reality—the light and shade cannot quite be accounted for—but the boldness and decision of the pen line throughout are unquestionable, though the want of reticence is open to criticism. Want of reticence is not so much the fault of "Doormat's" sketch of a ruin as want of solid construction; the vigorous assertion of tone-contrasts is permissible in a summary study of this character, but surer drawing of the architectural lines would have made the whole thing more convincing.

"Black Spot's" ambition in attempting to record

the complex detail of Westminster Abbey is justified by the result; the drawing is happy enough in its general suggestion and it bears close examination, but the distribution of the light and shade is a little arbitrary. "Pan's" less ambitious effort is, however, not less successful; its simpler manner and stronger line make the draughtsman's intentions thoroughly intelligible. The drawing, too, gains in brilliancy by being restricted to a limited range of tones. "Devonia's" sketch of The Beguinage, Bruges is well drawn in a summary way, but would have been improved by more sensitiveness of handling; and "Smoke's" drawing of a cottage at Brookthorpe, Gloucestershire, suffers also from insensitiveness of line, though as a piece of skilfully conventionalised pen work it is far from unsatisfactory. There are other examples, like "Teddies" St. Catherine's Court, the sketch of cottages by the sea by "Mops," and the neat study of a half-timbered building, "Salwarpe Court," which show rightly directed effort; and there is a clever little note of a Brittany shop by "Kate," which illustrates well the use that can be made of strong tone contrasts—though in this last example a not entirely legitimate effect has been obtained by mixing grey pencil tones with the black ink lines.

JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS.— V. "MAKING UP FOR THE STAGE," BY UTAMARO.

IN an early number of THE STUDIO (Vol. iv., p. 137) the late Mr. S. Bing wrote an appreciative article upon Utamaro—one of the best known of the Japanese eighteenth-century designers. In illustration of that article there appeared a selection of his colour-prints, reproduced in "half-tone" in the text. So much of the charm of these colour-prints, whether by Utamaro or by his contemporaries, lies in the delicate combinations of harmonising tints which distinguish them, that to reproduce the prints otherwise than in facsimile is, as we have always felt, to leave out their chief attraction. In the example now presented to our readers the subtle gradations of refined tones have been carefully matched by our colour-printer, and form in themselves a lesson in colour harmony. The subject is an actor being made up for the stage. The various accessories, the little pot of colour, the mirror, the wig, the dress, cap and sword, all bear mute witness of the occasion. The text which appears in the blank space over the figures is a play upon words in allusion to the piece to be performed, and as such is untranslatable.

"MAKING UP FOR THE ..."

"A SHOP IN"
BY "KATE"

record of the details of a scene at suggesting an effect of sketch the line is less and the carelessness is occasional evidence of want of object. As a specimen his pen work is an example of the best of the kind. It is one of the best I have seen which is not to excellent. In "Village" of a quaint but in correct the process of execution is a good deal of regard of reality. The drawing is to be accounted for by the fact that the pen line is not so good as the brush. Want of reticence is not a fault. "Doormat's" sketch of a man is a good example of the vigorous contrasts which are permissible in a sketch of this character, but surer drawing of the figure would have made the drawing more convincing.

The artist's intention in attempting to record

the complex detail of Westminster Abbey is justified by the result: the drawing is happy enough in its general suggestion and it bears close examination, but the distribution of the light and shade is a little arbitrary. "Pan's" less ambitious effort is, however, not less successful: its simpler manner and stronger line make the draughtsman's intentions thoroughly intelligible. The drawing, too, gains in permanency by being restricted to a limited range of tones. "Devonia's" sketch of The P., Bruges is well drawn in a summary way, but would have been improved by more firmness of handling; and "Smoke's" drawing of a cottage at Brookthorpe, Gloucestershire, suffers from insensitiveness of line, though as a piece of skilfully conventionalised pen work it is far from unsatisfactory. There are other examples. Like "Teddie's" St. Catherine's Court, the sketch of cottages by the sea by "Mops," and the neat study of a half-timbered building, "Salwarre Court" which show rightly directed effort; and there is a clever little note of a Brittany shop by "Kate," which illustrates well the use that can be made of strong tone contrasts—though in this last example a not entirely legitimate effect has been obtained by mixing grey pencil tones with the black ink lines.

JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS.— V. "MAKING UP FOR THE STAGE," BY UTAMARO.

IN an early number of THE STUDIO (Vol. iv, p. 137) the late Mr. S. Bing wrote an appreciative article upon Utamaro—one of the best known of the Japanese eighteenth-century designers. In illustration of that article there appeared a selection of his colour-prints, reproduced in "half tone" in the text. So much of the charm of these colour-prints, whether by Utamaro or by his contemporaries, lies in the delicate combinations of harmonising tints which distinguish them, that to reproduce the prints otherwise than in facsimile is, as we have always felt, to leave out their chief attraction. In the example now presented to our readers the subtle gradations of refined tones have been carefully matched by our colour-printer, and form in themselves a lesson in colour harmony. The subject is an actor being made up for the stage. The various accessories, the little pot of colour, the mirror, the wig, the dress, cap and sword, all bear mute witness of the occasion. The text which appears in the blank space over the figures is a play upon words in allusion to the piece to be performed, and as such is untranslatable.

"MAKING UP FOR THE STAGE." BY UTAMARO.

"AT GREENODD"

(Exhibited at Messrs. Dowdeswells' Galleries)

BY R. GWELO GOODMAN

STUDIO-TALK.

(From Our Own Correspondents.)

LONDON.—The departure from custom at the Royal Academy this winter, in exhibiting modern art instead of old, has been hailed with delight by one section of picture lovers and deprecated by others. The collection of the late George McCulloch seems to give a résumé of many Academy years, and the great names of the Academy are subject to a new test with their works reassembled in company with the outsider Whistler, and Burne-Jones. For all that distinguished names are in the catalogue, distinction was not the note achieved by Mr. McCulloch in making his collection. He had a wise rule only to buy from living painters and apparently his taste had been educated entirely upon Academy exhibitions. From them, with a few exceptions, he took of the best. Towards the end of his life, his appreciations widened. Without suggesting that the Old Master exhibitions should be done away with, it seems to us, that were it possible to arrange for the exhibition of private collections, even whilst the collectors are alive (if they could be induced to subscribe to so patriotic a scheme), the allocation of some of the rooms at the Academy to this purpose during part of the winter months would serve a great purpose, familiarising the public with famous works they have not seen or that have passed out of their sight if not from memory. It has been exceedingly interesting for everyone to see again Sir W. Q. Orchardson's The Young Duke; Burne-Jones' Love among the Ruins and The Rose Bower; the works by Dagnan-Bouveret; Lord Leighton's The Procession of the Daphnephoria and The Garden of the Hesperides; Sir John Millais' Sir Isumbras at the Ford; Whistler's Valparaiso Nocturne; and to see them all together. The Academy has also by this step earned the gratitude of the great outside public.

Mr. R. Gwelo Goodman, whose water-colours of subjects in the Lake districts are to be seen in Messrs. Dowdeswells' galleries, is an artist with much individuality of outlook and method. His work has freshness and strength, a kind of frank directness which is the evident outcome of acute observation of nature, and an agreeable decorative quality which can be accepted as proof of the correctness of his artistic taste. In these landscapes he has taken full advantage of the opportunities afforded him by the character of the scenery round about the Lakes; he has appreciated rightly its dignity and largeness of line, and its impressive beauty of effect, and he has treated it with a scholarly reserve that can be sincerely admired. The value of this reserve is seen most of all in his intelligent avoidance of those errors of overstatement which are too often found in paintings of wide-stretching distances; he never fritters away his effects by insisting unduly upon little things, but he keeps instead the unity of his compositions by excluding from them everything that is unnecessary for the proper explaining of his design, and so establishing the right balance between the different parts of his picture. As a colourist he is sensitive and refined, a lover of delicate harmonies and subtle relations of colour-tone, which he treats with the same kind of breadth that distinguishes his arrangement of lines and masses. This exhibition shows attractively many of the better aspects of his art.

Studio-Talk

We give here two examples of photographs taken by Mrs. Caleb Keene, a South African lady who was represented in the last Photographic Salon, and who, in recognition of the good quality of her work, has recently been elected a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society.

Besides the unprecedented programme at the Academy, January and February have witnessed another great event, "Mr. Punch's Pageant" at the Leicester Gallery, consisting of a chronological series of original drawings and all the relics of the "Punch" office. The exhibition was continuously crowded. "Mr. Punch" will soon arrive at his three-score years and ten, and all these years he has sympathetically held the public pulse, and with unfailing liveliness sustained his countrymen's traditions. The art which has found acceptance in his pages has always been that which has expressed the characteristics of the nation, and every aspect of British social life has been reflected with a fidelity unknown in the pictorial chronicles of any other land.

The exhibition of pictures of children at the Baillie Gallery resolved itself somewhat inevitably into a women's exhibition, since the art of women so often inclines to the nursery, to the women's province in life, for its subjects, and is perhaps always at its happiest in it. The World is so full of a number of Things, by Miss Amy Atkinson; A Lady from China, by Miss Maud Henderson; Her Seventh Birthday, by Miss Eva Roos; The Invalid, by

"MOTHERHOOD"

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MINNA KEENE

"INTERIOR OF A GERMAN COTTAGE"

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MINNA KEENE

Helen Bedford, were all works of much success. Miss Gertrude des Clayes' work was especially worthy of remark; the eighteenth-century masters have evidently been studied, but though her style is a reminiscent one, it has individuality of feeling. Miss Clare Atwood was represented by those little panels in which her art displays itself to such advantage. Miss Annie French's work was as pleasantly decorative as ever, and the more decorative the more pleasant, for she does not succeed as a realist. Messrs. Norman Wilkinson, R. Anning Bell, J. A. Shepherd, John Hassall, and notably Mr. W. Graham Robertson, who has excelled so much in the interpretation of child life, were represented on this occasion.

The Carfax Gallery last month exhibited pictures and drawings by Prof. C. J. Holmes. Prof. Holmes is a sensitive painter, but though such a student of the art of painting, in other than a technical sense, he, no more than other gifted contemporaries of his, has learnt from the old masters that reserve which belongs to strength and which always stops short of a merely musical sweetness.

At the Fine Art Society the work of the quartette of Roman Painters, E. Coleman, U. Coromaldi, V. Grassi and C. Innocenti, made a success in January, the proceeds going to the Italian Earthquake Fund.

The exhibition of sketches held by the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours was characterised by the lack of character which so much of the work showed, and where character was present, it was too much of one kind. Mr. Dudley Hardy's achievements often survive the double test, and among the various groups of pictures (the exhibits of each painter were grouped together on this occasion) were some works which should be singled out as above the average, such as Mr. Stuart Richardson's Waiting for the Market, Mr. Saunderson Wells' The Favourite and Heavy Going, John R. Reid's The Fishing Fleet, Mr. Claude Hayes' A Rainy Road, Mr. John Hassall's The Tiff, Mr. Douglas Almond's Girl of Pont Aven, Mr. W. Hatherell's Coast near Hyères, Mr. Terrick Williams' An Archway, Tangiers, Mr. H. M. Rheams' The Wreck. It is a pity that so little variety creeps into Mr. Moffat Lindner's art, for his vision and handling always give their own touch of refinement to the walls. Some careful pencil drawings by Edward C. Clifford were a successful feature of the exhibition.

Studio-Talk

Mr. Bertram Park's photographs reproduced here are interesting examples of prints produced by the oil pigment process, a process which had its origin in the Poitevin Collotype process of half a century ago, though the theory underlying it has only been reduced to a practical form in recent years, through the investigations of Mr. G. E. H. Rawlins. The process, as described by Mr. Park, is briefly this. A piece of paper is coated with a layer of gelatine, which is sensitized with a bichromate salt and dried. It is then printed on through an ordinary glass negative by the action of light until the image becomes just visible, taken out of the printing frame and immersed in cold water for an hour or so. It will now be found that the high lights of the image have absorbed water and have swollen up in relief, the shadows remaining insoluble. If a special preparation of oil colour is now dabbed on with round, flat-topped brushes the oil colour will be absorbed by the insoluble parts or shadows of the image, while the high lights, having already absorbed water, will repel the oil colour, and thus the picture is built up. The difficulty of providing a suitable ink or "oil pigment" has always been a stumbling-block to the general use of the process, and it was only last year that Mr. Park succeeded in finding an ink that is satisfactory in every way and that will "take" freely on the gelatine base.

The United Arts Club's exhibition, just concluded at the Grafton Gallery, was the best to which they have attained so far, and greatly in advance of their recent displays. Among the artists of note who were well represented were Messrs. John Lavery, Alfred East, A.R.A., Alexander Jamieson, J. Aumonier, W. Rothenstein, A. W. Peppercorn, Walter Russell and James Pryde. The exhibition also contained a set of etchings by Mr. Alfred East, some good examples of Mr. Tom Robertson's work, interesting canvases by Mr. Fred F. Foottet; and we were attracted to two works, My Garden and A Phantasy, by Mr. James Gibbon, a painter whose work is new to us. The sculpture, miniatures and handicrafts would perhaps have been best grouped all in a room together. With such gifted contributors as Mr. John Tweed, Mr. and Mrs. A. Gaskin, Misses V. and F. Ramsey, Miss Jessie Bayes, Miss Woodward and

"NAOMI"

FROM AN OIL PRINT BY BERTRAM PARK

PORTRAIT OF G. A. STOREY, ESQ., A.R.A.
FROM AN OIL PRINT BY BERTRAM PARK

Studio-Talk

others, this section was as notable this time as that of the pictures.

We reproduce as supplement a drawing by Miss Mary Williams, a promising exhibitor at the Royal Academy, Society of Portrait Painters, and the Women's International. Formerly a student of the "Atelier Colarossi" in Paris, Miss Williams won silver medals in the annual "concours" for drawing and for painting from the nude.

Arts and crafts exhibitions before Christmas are becoming more numerous each year, and it is to be hoped that by the power of competition they may be prevented from deteriorating into mere bazaars. Several commercial enterprises of the bazaar calibre have of recent years posed as art exhibitions, and one is led into fearing the rapid degeneration of the true "Arts and Crafts" exhibition. No accusation of this kind could be raised against the Baillie Gallery in Bruton Street, referred to in our last number. Here the serious work was all good and well chosen. Mr. Bonner's show of silver work and jewelry, at Kensington, also deserves mention. His designs for articles for the table, spoons, pepper-pots, etc., are quite pleasing, and the workmanship is in all cases good. There is nothing of the amateur about the studio of Miss Woodward, whose little ornaments in silver and enamel are eminently calculated to please a public that is not satisfied by the conventional machine-made produce of the shops.

At a complimentary dinner last month Sir Isidore Spielmann was presented by his colleagues on the British Art Committee of the Franco-British Exhibition with a handsome silver-gilt vase in token of their appreciation of his work in connection with the section and his previous services to British Art generally. Sir Edward Poynter, P.R.A., took the chair, and others present included Messrs. T. Brock, R.A., E. J. Gregory, R.A., P.R.I., F. Dicksee, R.A., T. E. Colcutt, Alfred East, A.R.A., P.R.B.A., A. G. Temple, J. Coutts Michie, A.R.S.A., M. H. Spielmann, Guy F. Laking, M.V.O., and Sir Charles Lawes-Wittewronge.

PARIS.—Mons. G. Roucher, the director of one of the most important publications in France, "La Grande Revue," and who is at the same time a discriminating collector, has had built for himself in the Rue d'Offémont a modern residence which deserves a

ROOM IN MONS. G. ROUCHER'S PARIS RESIDENCE, WITH FURNITURE DESIGNED BY MAURICE DUFRÈNE

174

The case in token of their appreciation of his services in connection with the section and his services to British Art generally. Sir John Lubbock, F.R.A., took the chair, and others present included Messrs. T. Brock, R.A., L. J. Goss, F.R.S., P.R.I., F. Dicksee, R.A., T. E. Hartley, Aged Last, A.R.A., P.R.B.A., A. G. Sutherland-Guthrie, M.C., M.H. Stirling, C.B.E., J. Laking, M.V.O., and Sir Charles Tennant, Bart.

1838. Mons. G. Roucher, the director of one of the most important publications in France, "La Grande Revue," and who is at the same time a discriminating collector, had built for himself in the Rue de la Harpe a modern residence which deserves a

145 S PARIS RESIDENCE, WITH FURNITURE DESIGNED BY MAURICE DUFRÈNE

FROM A DRAWING IN COLOURED CHALKS BY MARY WILLIAMS.

TWO ROOMS IN MONS. G. ROUCHER'S PARIS RESIDENCE, WITH FURNITURE DESIGNED BY MAURICE DUFRÈNE

Studio-Talk

BRONZE HEAD

BY AUGUSTE RODIN

detailed study, for it must certainly be counted as one of the most successful productions of decorative art in France at the present day. The three photographs which we reproduce give a fairly good idea of the furniture which M. Maurice Dufrène has made for the house in question. It contains besides some first-rate mural decorations. The outer hall, which one reaches first on entering from the street, is embellished with paintings by M. Maurice Denis, who has here done some of his best work. The dining-room has been entirely decorated by Besnard, while Lalique has been responsible for all the appurtenances of the lighting, and, lastly, around the top of the great gallery in which M. Roucher's pictures are hung there runs a frieze by Desvallières. Among M. Roucher's art treasures one must mention an excellent painting by Baertsoen, and several important works by Lucien Simon, Morrice and Charles Cottet.

In a charming exhibition at the Blot Galleries in the Rue Richepanse, there has been gathered together the work of several talented women artists, among whom one must particularly mention the daughter of the painter Osterlind, now Mme. E. Sarradin, whose delightful water-colour studies of flowers have all the roguishness and daintiness of this style of painting, to which so many ladies devote their energies without endowing their work with any individuality.

At the recent Exhibition of the Works of Art purchased by the State there were shown certain very remarkable works lately acquired from Auguste Rodin. Of these we reproduce two studies of heads which are to be added to the sculpture collection at the Luxembourg Museum. These are bronzes cast from the wax, and strike one by the deep intensity of their expression and their bold modelling.

As usual, the Société Internationale has had its annual display at Petit's. The Society is now in its twenty-fifth year, a very respectable age for a body of this kind. Unfortunately the Society is no longer what it used to be, having lost some of its best supporters, who have gone over to the Société Nouvelle and other similar associations. Still it continues to have an honourable existence, and

BRONZE HEAD

BY AUGUSTE RODIN

INTERIOR, HAGENRUND EXHIBITION, VIENNA ARRANGED BY OSKAR LASKE
(See p. 69)

remains in the front rank. Among the best things sent to the show we must mention the landscapes, so freely painted, by M. Félix Borchardt, a true pleinairist; then the Dutch scenes by M. M. Bompard, the figure subjects by M. Bunny, which have somewhat of the modest charm of Rossetti's heroines. The sunlit pictures of M. Friesseke bore witness to an artist who seeks and strives always with success. The head study of M. Fallières, by M. Calbet, was a very poor sketch and may be disregarded. On the other hand, what grace and elegance did we not find in the works of Gardier! A new-comer, M. Hubbel, deserves also to be singled out for his excellent qualities as a colourist, and likewise M. Richard Miller, M. Walden, M. Ollson, M. MacCameron, M. Woog and M. Zo, a faithful observer of Spanish life.

The Seventh Exhibition of the Painter-Lithographers has been held this year chez M. Dewambez, whose excellently arranged galleries enjoy more and more success every day. We believe we are right in stating that the members have made a special effort, and certainly the whole appearance of the exhibition bore out this supposition. M. Belle-roche, whose lithographs in his own personal style become better and better, paid a visit to England for the especial purpose of recruiting a new contingent of exhibitors, and returned with some excellent prints by Jackson, J. Pennell and Charles Shannon, which were very worthy of note. Among the Frenchmen I noticed M. Neumont, a true disciple of Gavarni; that blunt realist, M. Maxime Dethomas; M. Maurice Eliot, whose work is full of elegance; M. Leandre, of whose art further praise is superfluous; and M. Lucien Monod, whose three colour lithographs, taken from a small number of examples, were a veritable feast for the eyes.

L'Eclectique, a new society presided over by the illustrious author Anatole France, has had a most successful first exhibition. The prevailing character of this association is that it contains more decorative artists than is the case with other societies, and the general aspect of the exhibition thus gained infinitely in variety. From this point of view I took pleasure in seeing the lovely vase by M. Delaherche, the jewelled glass by M. Rivaud, the sculptures in wood by Raymond Bigot, of which a dead raven and the head of a turkey were works of premier importance, the stoneware and the porcelain by M. Dammouse, the enamels of M. Eugène Feuillâtre, and the ironwork by M. Robert. Among the pictures there were some charming interiors by M. Pierre Calmettes, to whose work an article was devoted in THE STUDIO for December, 1907; the paintings and the pastels

TWO INTERIORS OF HAGENBUND WINTER EXHIBITION, VIENNA

ARRANGED BY ARCHITECT OSKAR LASKE

Studio-Talk

by M. Adler; an excellent picture, Les Luttes, by M. Lucien Simon, the landscapes by Dauchez, Brittany scenes by M. Désiré-Lucas, warm colour notes by Mlle. A. Delasalle. All this formed a concentration of solid talent worthy of a more detailed study than we can give it. H. F.

VIENNA.—The arrangement of the Hagenbund winter exhibition was entrusted to a young architect, Oskar Laske, who has done some very good work both in Vienna and the surrounding country. Here he again proved himself highly capable, for there was something at once distinguished and elegant in his decorative treatment of the rooms. He is also a graphic artist of some power, as shown by some etchings in colour and black and white exhibited on this occasion. Franz Simon also contributed some etchings in colour, which, though French in subject, showed that the artist's long stay in Paris has in no way affected his national feeling. Prof. von Zügel's charcoal drawings of animals were very welcome, and demonstrated his signal powers as a draughtsman. A whole room was devoted to the works of Prof. Karl Haider, another Munich guest who has many admirers in Vienna, and one of whose works has been acquired for the Modern Gallery. Nature in her solemn and dignified aspects claims this artist's devotion; her capricious moods do not tempt him. He is a modern, but his modernity has a character of its own, perhaps because he was born at a time when the modern school was in its infancy. The artist's portrait of himself points to his abilities in another direction in which he would doubtless have excelled had he not given himself up to landscape.

Ludwig Ferdinand Graf exhibited a series of pictures of old gardens in Bellazio and scenes descriptive of his American journey, chiefly studies in light effects. He is essentially a colorist, but one who is filled with the melody of brightness, soaring ever higher and higher in his search for new tones of light. Walter Hampel's Biedermeier pictures are full of temperament of another hue. His Green Dress recalls the grace of the crinoline; his methods are simple and carried out with a delicacy and a poetic form peculiarly the artist's own. Hugo Baar's snow-scenes are true bits of nature, depicted with a masterly hand. Paul Ress in his Kielwasser showed us a torpedo boat in motion. Ludwig Kuba, August Roth, Raoul Frank, Jan Stursa, Glaucon Cambon, Adolf Gross, Otto Bruenhauser, Jakob Glasner, Josef Ullmann, J. Stretti, all contributed good work. Ferdinand Miehls's coloured etchings of Paris scenes are worthy performances, while the graphic section was made additionally attractive by a series of drawings which have been reproduced in "Simplicissimus." Henryk Uziemblo, K. Sichulski, Leo Delitz and Václav Maly contributed studies relating to peasant life and customs, showing how rich a harvest may be reaped in this direction.

Of portraits there were but few, but one, by O. Alexander, of a Russian lady, and Alexander Goltz's portrait of a lady were of special interest. A whole room was set apart for the drawings and studies of monkeys by Emmerich Simay. There

"THE GARLANDED BULL" (Hagenbund, Vienna)

BY LEO DELITZ

"A CHODOW GIRL" BY VÁCLAV MALÝ
(By permission of the Editor of "Zlata Praha," Prague)

were very few examples of plastic art, but these few were very good. Jan Stursa proved himself also to be a sculptor of merit in his crouching figure, while Sandor Jaray (Berlin) exhibited some fine bronzes and plaster figures. An exhibit of much interest was the magnificent work "An Ehren und an Siegen reich," which was presented to the Emperor in honour of his jubilee. The binding and other decorative features of this work were designed by Heinrich Lefler and Josef Urban, and mark an era in the art of book production.

The exhibition of modern Russian artists at the Secession was of great interest notwithstanding the fact that not a few artists of note were unrepresented, perhaps because their work is already familiar to the Viennese. Among the artists represented were N. Rerich, J. Bilibin, Maliutin, Dobuzhinski, Pasternak, A. Sredin, Sarubin, Seroff, B. Anisfeld, Boris Kustodieff, Miliotti and Vaznetzoff. Each of these artists has his own peculiar "touch" which distinguishes him not only from his fellow countrymen, but also from other artists of the same genre; some of them strong, individual and pre-eminent in portrait painting or in landscape, others like Miliotti, full of romantic mysticism. The true Russian tinge is also to be seen in the lithographs and woodcuts by Madame A. Ostroumova-Lebedeva and Anna Krüger-Prachoff, two ladies whose work shows great talent and individuality. A. S. L.

BERLIN.—The early death of Walter Leistikow has bereft German art of a really national painter. It was he who discovered the beauties of the much neglected Mark Brandenburg, and he never tired of rendering the quiet charms of pretty lakes in which the modesty of fir and birch was mirrored. He saw idyll and romance where Prussian rationalism only felt "the sand-strewing box of the Holy Roman Empire." The posthumous exhibition in the Salon Cassirer proved that in spite of the artist's versatility he remained true to the last to the domain of his preference, and this faithfulness was rewarded by an ever-expanding art. What Rembrandt and Ruysdael did for their Dutch plains, Troyon and Rousseau for their Barbizon woodland, Leistikow has accomplished for the Mark. Yet he travelled much and reproduced nature wherever he was staying. Norwegian fjords, Swedish coasts, and especially the beauty of the Danish downlands, recur in his art. He had a hand for snow and hoar frost, for mist and forest gloom, and, although he could also closely watch the sun penetrating such privacies, he felt happiest in afternoon moods. Leistikow's fascination issues from his genuine poet's soul. He is never the mere copyist—every branch of a tree, every ripple of water, is penetrated with poetical essence. Sentiment, not sentimentality, the melancholy of the contemplative, not of the morbid, mind is his distinction. He loves to dwell in stillness, not in storm. The exhibition afforded a comprehensive study of his work. We could see him first as the careful Eschke pupil; then different influences—Liebermann, Willumsen and Manet—were traceable, until he quietly and decisively asserted himself. He appears to have been strongly touched by the summarising, decorative tendency of his time, less by its impressionism. After having attempted landscape-fresco, the execution of which was frustrated by his illness, it was granted to him to concentrate in some last Mark Brandenburg pictures his highest possibilities. The realisation of the project to acquire some of Leistikow's paintings for the new Märkische Museum in Berlin would only be an expression of gratitude due to him by the nation.

Studio-Talk

An Eugen Bracht collection at Keller and Reiner's Salon yielded at the same time an opportunity to study the second leader of modern German landscape painting. Here we felt the touch of power. We were lifted at once from plains to mountain tops. This pathetic turn adds grandeur wherever it touches—the pines of the Savoy Alps in the rhapsody of the storm, the first sun-glow on the rocks of the desert, the simple cottage in the Eifel mountains, the brick-kiln in snow, all receive by his brush a heightened character, some Byronic additions. Bracht's art is ennobling, it never stops at mere description. He is lavish in shaping, and rich, yet always distinguished, in colour. His facility tempts him to a somewhat hasty production, but the stamp of his genius is always edifying.

At the Schulte Salon modernism attempted to celebrate triumphs, but could only attain moderate success. An extensive show of Gotthard Kuehl's works appeared only satisfactory in some paintings. His method of painting, and especially his treatment of air, is sometimes a violation of reality. His air looks almost like water, and this omnipresent liquidity damages the precision of outline, and makes doors and houses assume a rather tumble-down aspect. Young Düsseldorf landscape-painters like Clarenbach, Ophey and Deusser, who were also to be studied here, are reticent out-door students who have learned to render air with veracity. Sohn-Rethel, who belongs to this group, looks at us with the truthful and innocent eyes of a modern pre-Raphaelite.

Fritz Gurlitt attracted many visitors to his salon with a considerable Ludwig von Hofmann exhibition. The witchery that this master practises is the best proof of the persistence of idealistic aspirations. His art makes us forget reality, transports like the chariot of the gods into Elysian domains. Eternal spring reigns in happy islands with trees laden with pink blossoms, amethyst waves playing round russet rocks, and beautiful virgins and youths and children enjoying the bliss of life, winding garlands and frolicking, bathing and making music. The men ride like the warriors on the Parthenon reliefs, and the maidens dance like the Bacchantes on the Theseus temple. The omnipresence of the Greek spirit isolates Hofmann's art in our time of tyrannical realism. We breathe the hilarity of his classicism with gratitude, although we cannot help recognising that his melodies flow from very few chords and are too often repeated. The register of his models is so limited that the type dominates, but this granted, we can only admire the skill of his variation. The decorative side of Hofmann's talent and the sensuousness of his colour make him the best fresco painter for festive halls in our time. He worthily ranks in German art with Feuerbach, Böcklin and Marées.

MONUMENT OVER THE GRAVE OF THE POET JOHANN MEYER

DESIGNED BY HEINRICH MISSFELDT

At the Künstlerhaus, Dürer and Grünwald times were recalled in the paintings and drawings of Professor Richard Müller. We found the same penetrative power of the character reader, the same veracity and patience in the rendering of detail and the same imaginative and religious cravings. But we found also the same mercilessness of the naturalist. Müller's wings are impeded by the pedantry of the statistician, and often when he fascinates he also repels. He is a classical master when he is the draughtsman, but his pictorial physiognomy is somewhat sober. His brush does not tremble under the intoxication of colour. We wish to see such works on the walls of our museums, or in their print-rooms, but they are not desirable home companions.

Heinrich Missfeldt is one of the younger Berlin sculptors who are steadily coming to the front. On several occasions his exhibits at the Grosse Berliner Kunstausstellung and at Schulte's Salon have attracted general notice. His art, with its tendency towards classical rhythm and the graces of the Praxitelean period, has particularly interested the Kaiser, who has acquired the sculptor's beautiful statue Farewell for his private collection. Missfeldt began his artistic career as a wood carver, but admission was refused to him in the Royal Arts and Crafts School. He was more fortunate in the Royal Academy of Arts, where he studied drawing with Brausewetter. The powerful hand of Peter Breuer, as well as the distinguished leadership of Janensch, ripened his faculties as a sculptor.

The plastic caricatures reproduced in the illustrations on page 74 were among those exhibited at Messrs. Friedmann and Weber's Salon before Christmas and referred to in my notes of last month.
J. J.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Special interest attaches to the exhibition of contemporary American paintings, held at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington, in December and January, not merely because it was the largest exhibition of the year and offered the highest awards, but because it was most truly national in its scope. About four hundred pictures were enumerated in its catalogue, and these were contributed by artists residing in all parts of the United States, France, England and Italy, but only such as could claim American citizenship. There were more figure paintings than either portraits or landscapes in the exhibition, which is not usual in America, and for the most part they were recent productions,

"THE DEATH OF BALDUR" BY HEINRICH MISSFELDT

"CROUCHING GIRL"
BY HEINRICH MISSFELDT

Studio-Talk

but a few exceptions were made in favour of works of special distinction.

While there were, it was true, comparatively few great pictures in this display, the average of excellence was higher than commonly. In fact, the work shown, taken all in all, was extremely conservative, serious, thoughtful and well balanced. One of the tendencies of American painters has been toward fragmentary utterance, but many of these canvases showed not only skilful technique but completeness in composition. There was greater assurance of stable ideals than heretofore.

PLASTIC CARICATURE

BY R. L. LEONARD

(See Berlin Studio Talk, page 72)

It is worth noting that the majority of the pictures were American in theme. This does not mean, of course, transcriptions of Rocky Mountain scenery, of Indians and cow-boys, peculiar to America alone, some of which were included, but of simple rural landscapes, of refined home life and everyday street scenes—things close at hand, unaffected and lovely. Special remark should be made of some charming genres set forth by Edmund C. Tarbell, George de Forest Brush, Joseph De Camp and T. W. Dewing, which essayed successfully to interpret with charm contemporary life among the upper classes. The Guitar Player, by Joseph de Camp, to which the second prize of $1,500 was given, is a well-composed, colourful and attractive picture. Mr Brush's Family Group showed a much tighter technique and a little more academic handling, but was charming in line and masterly in treatment. Winslow Homer, the great painter of the sea, was represented by a picture entitled Early Morning, which showed some of the fisherfolk of Maine on a rugged sea cliff silhouetted against a gently illumined sky, and by a dramatic and somewhat decorative painting of a flight of wild geese crossing the dunes. With these canvases would naturally be classed paintings by F. D. Millet, Walter MacEwen, and Marion Powers, for a certain sympathy in treatment and likeness in theme. In great contrast, however, were the figure studies

PLASTIC CARICATURE

BY R. L. LEONARD

(See Berlin Studio Talk, page 72)

"A THREAD OF SCARLET"
BY HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE

"THE YELLOW TULIP"
BY T. W. DEWING

Studio-Talk

by Robert Reid, Hugh Breckenridge, Mary Cassatt and Childe Hassam. Mr. Reid's paintings—one of which, by the way, received the third prize of $1,000—were extremely high-keyed, and depended for charm solely upon their gently modulated colour schemes. Mr. Breckenridge's works derived their interest primarily through the cleverness of their solution of the problem set by a figure seen by firelight. Miss Cassatt and Mr. Hassam were both well represented.

Of the portraits, certainly the most notable, though not the best, was that of President Roosevelt, painted by Gari Melchers, on order from Charles L. Freer, who purposed it as a gift to the nation. There were five single portraits by John S. Sargent, one of which (that of Miss Mathilde Townsend, of Washington) was characteristically clever and engaging. The rest, with, perhaps, the exception of one of James Whitcomb Riley, the poet, were by no means equal to his best. J. J. Shannon also was less well represented than commonly, showing only his portrait of Mrs. Guggenheim, which is rather faulty in construction and painty in suggestion. Miss Cecilia Beaux, on the other hand, never exhibited a stronger painting than her portrait of Mr. Lewis, President of the Pennsylvania Academy. R. E. Clarkson, F. P. Vinton, E. C. Tarbell, Wm. M. Chase, and Kenyon Cox likewise made in this field notable contributions, the last named by his memorable portrait of the late Augustus Saint Gaudens, the sculptor, at work in his studio.

The first prize ($2,000), which carried with it the Corcoran gold medal, was awarded to a winter picture, one of a number by Edward W. Redfield, to whom two years previously a medal of the third class had been given. For vital realism and breadth of effect this picture was distinctly impressive, and doubtless it was its truth, virility and skilful manipulation which won it honour. Mr. Redfield's works are not dissimilar in style and character from those of Mr. Schofield, who was represented in this exhibition by two striking canvases.

Among the landscape painters, Williard Metcalf probably touched the highest note, though J. Francis Murphy, Emil Carlsen, D. W. Tryon, Leonard Ochtman and half-a-dozen others exhibited work of almost equally fine quality. Almost without exception these landscapes were not pictorial compositions, but subtle transcriptions of bits of nature seen under peculiarly pleasing conditions; not rampant fancies indefinitely set forth, but lovely realities sympathetically interpreted.

There was quite a good representation of the American painters residing in Paris, and to one of this number—Frederick C. Friesske—the fourth prize ($500) was awarded for a study from the nude, entitled Marcelle. One other feature calls for mention—the really brilliant technical facility displayed by certain painters, among whom may be named Emil Carlsen, Walter Gay and Aline Solomons, in the inter-

"AN ANCESTOR"

BY WALTER MACEWEN

Art School Notes

"THE ISLAND"

BY EDWARD W. REDFIELD

pretation of still life—works which went far to show that painters in America—the land of haste—are learning to labour patiently and are technically mastering their art.

L. M.

ART SCHOOL NOTES.

LONDON.—The illustrations that accompany these notes include reproductions of three of the figure designs shown at Burlington House in the recent exhibition of works by students of the Royal Academy. The first illustration is a reproduction of the excellent cartoon of A Draped Female Figure on a Wind-swept Sea-shore, with which Miss Marianne H. W. Robilliard gained the silver medal and the prize of £25. Miss Amy Joanna Fry's design gained the prize of £40 offered for the best scheme for a picture symbolical of "Husbandry," and suitable for the decoration of a portion of a public building. Unfortunately, in a black-and-white reproduction complete justice cannot be done to the good qualities of Miss Fry's design, the strongest point of which is its colour. Rich and harmonious colour is also a prominent feature in Miss Dorothy Hawksley's design for "Husbandry," which was one of the best of those submitted in the recent competition. Miss Hawksley, it will be remembered, won the second of the two silver medals offered to the Academy students for the best paintings from the nude.

It is interesting to notice in the list of visitors to the Royal Academy Schools for the present year the name of Mr. Charles Sims, A.R.A., who in July will, for the first time, give the students the benefit of his advice in the School of Painting. The visitors for March are, in the School of Painting, Mr. J. H. F. Bacon, A.R.A.; the School of Drawing, Mr. Henry Woods, R.A.; the School of Sculpture, Mr. William Goscombe John, A.R.A.; and the School of Architecture, Mr. R. T. Blomfield, A.R.A., and Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A.

At the Slade School the prizes, with one exception, are awarded at the end of the summer term. The exception is the Slade Prize of £25 for figure composition, which is awarded at Christmas. In

(Royal Academy Schools : Prize Cartoon)

"DRAPED FEMALE FIGURE ON A WIND-SWEPT SEA-SHORE." BY MARIANNE H. W. ROBILLIARD

Art School Notes

the recent competition for the Slade Prize the honours were equally divided between two students, Mr. J. Innes and Miss F. Phillips.

Mr. George Clausen, R.A., who, in the place of Sir William Orchardson, distributed the prizes at the St. John's Wood Art Schools, deplored in his brief speech the unavoidable absence of Sir William, whose counsel, he said, was possibly more valuable than that of any other living artist. However, Mr. Clausen, while modestly disclaiming any attempt to fill the place of the great portrait and subject painter, managed in his address to give some excellent advice to the students, and his efforts in this direction were ably seconded by Mr. David Murray, R.A. The Orchardson silver medal, for painting from the nude, was awarded to Mr. R. C. Weatherby, for what Mr. Clausen described as "a first-rate incomplete study," in reference, doubtless, to the fact that the treatment of the extremities could have been carried further. Mr. Weatherby also gained an honourable mention in the competition for a six months' scholarship offered for the three best drawings from the life, which was taken by Mr. D. Chumaceiro. Another six months' studentship, for the best work done in the landscape class, was given to Miss Mildred Stevens; a three months' scholarship, for the best set of three heads from life, to Miss E. Rudhall; and a three months' scholarship, for still life and a drawing of a head from the cast, to Major F. H. Rawlins. The "Graphic" prize, presented annually by the proprietors of the "Graphic," which carries with it a three months' scholarship in the black-and-white class, was won by Miss E. M. Hosking, who carried off besides the sketch prize in the first division. The sketch prize in the second division fell to Mr. S. Henderson, and the elementary antique prize to Mr. S. Marshall. Mrs. L. Cooper received an honourable mention for her work in the Pinner landscape class. The prize for colour composition was not awarded, but at the request of the judges, the prize was allotted to a group of works by Miss G. L. Elliot.

So far as the regular school work was concerned the judging was undertaken by Sir George Framp-ton, R.A., Mr. J. W. Waterhouse, R.A., and Mr. G. Clausen, R.A.; Mr. David Murray, R.A., awarded the landscape prizes, and the work submitted for the "Graphic" prize was judged by Mr. Frank Craig. The exhibition of school work, held at the schools in Elm Tree Road, was varied and interesting, and Mr. C. M. Quiller Orchardson and Mr. F. D. Walenn had every reason to be satisfied with the display made by their pupils. The practice of making memory studies from the life is encouraged at St. John's Wood, and some of the drawings shown were capital, especially those by Mr. A. E. Odle, who exhibited in addition some pen-and-ink studies

CARTOON FOR DECORATIVE PAINTING

(Royal Academy Schools)

BY AMY JOANNA FRY

Art School Notes

CARTOON FOR DECORATIVE PAINTING

(Royal Academy Schools)

BY DOROTHY HAWKSLEY

in the Beardsley manner, remarkable both as imitations and as pieces of dexterous execution. The landscape that gained the scholarship for Miss Stevens was a sympathetic study of a bend in a river, with a foreground of meadowsweet and ragwort. A special word of praise is due to Miss G. L. Elliot's Sheep Fold at Sunset and her Cottage Garden, and to one or two clever little pictures of moonlight by Mr. C. R. W. Nevinson. Good work of various kinds was also shown by Mr. Longstaff, Miss Wickham, Miss Stewart, Miss K. Clausen, Miss Thrupp, Mrs. Bashall, Mr. H. W. Sandham, Miss C. Elliot, Mr. R. Vercoe, Mr. N. N. Johnstone and Mrs. Lloyd Cooper.

The list of honours gained by students in the Arts and Crafts Department of the Sir John Cass Technical Institute included a Landseer Scholarship (in sculpture) of £40 at the Royal Academy Schools, gained by Mr. William Charles Matthias. The entrance examination to the Academy Schools was passed by another Sir John Cass student, Mr. A. Buxton. Miss Kate M. Dally gained the Art Master's certificate of the Board of Education, and minor scholarships in art were awarded to several students by the London County Council. The local prizes in the Arts and Crafts Department were awarded, in design, to C. M. Kirkman; in drawing, to W. M. Collier and J. H. Gordon; modelling, H. N. Eastaugh and W. Matthias; enamelling, S. L. Samuels; jewellery, J. Hassnovitch; and metal work, J. Harlaar.

Bolt Court, Fleet Street, which is inseparably connected with the memory of Dr. Johnson, does not give any promise of artistic interest to the passer-by in Fleet Street who may happen to glance down the narrow, dingy alley. In Bolt Court, however, is the London County Council School of Photo-Engraving and Lithography, housed at present in the old buildings of the School of the Stationers' Company, and an exhibition of the students' work, held there lately, proved that art can flourish amid what appear to be the most unsuitable surroundings. The exhibition was not intended to illustrate the technical achievements in reproduction of the school directed by Mr. A. J. Newton. It was composed almost entirely of original work executed either in the life class or outside the school by members of the sketch club, and some of it was exceedingly good. Especially worthy of mention were the drawings by Mr. R. C. Peter; a little painting of real artistic quality, of nymphs running down the sands to the sea, by Mr. C. W. Barber, and a second study by the same student, of girls playing in the surf. Mr. Blampied's drawings of children, the time studies of flowers by Mr. H. C. Hammond, Mr. J. Daniells, and Mr. E. Penwarden, and the life studies by Mr. H. Harris were other good things in an attractive exhibition.

Reviews and Notices

To the sketch club at this school Mr. Nelson Dawson, three or four years ago, presented a charming little badge of silver of his own design, and a replica of it is given annually by Sir George Frampton, R.A., to the best student of the year.

The Royal Female School of Art, the origin and history of which was sketched in these columns in October, is now merged in the Central School of Arts and Crafts, as the "Women's Day Art Classes," which are conducted in some of the upper rooms of the vast new building in Southampton Row, instead of in the stately Georgian houses of Queen Square. The change is not beneficial, nor does there seem to be any good reason why it was ever made, but although Queen Square is a thing of the past, the school, so far, is conducted on almost the old lines by Miss Rose Wilby, assisted by Miss S. R. Canton, Miss I. L. Gloag, Miss K. M. Wyatt, Miss Isabel Farler and Miss H. E. Dunnell. Last month the first exhibition of students' work was held in the new quarters, an exhibition that showed no falling off in quality and included an excellent retrospective group which represented the school at the Franco-British Exhibition. Prominent among the exhibits was the design for an altar frontal which gained the gold medal given by the King. This was won by Miss Winifred Wight, who won also the William Atkinson Scholarship of £30. The Queen's Scholarship of £50 was taken by Miss Winifred Fison; the prize for drapery arranged on the living model, by Miss Jane S. Blaikley, and that for time sketching from life by Miss Brenda Hughes. Some capital designs for flowered chintzes were shown by Miss Winifred Marchant, Miss A. Dorothy Cohen, Miss H. Knight, Miss Winifred Fison, Miss Phyllis Mead and Miss Winifred Wight. The prizes in this section were awarded to Miss Marchant and Miss Cohen. Miss Hilda Knight gained the prize for flower studies in preparation for design, and Miss Edith Livesay and Miss Jessie Humby for figure studies in line. In the National Art Competition Miss Annie K. Boyd's example of book-binding in oak and leather gained a prize. The commended students in the national and local competitions included Miss Beatrice Miller, Miss Mary Bishop, Miss Georgina C. Levie and Miss Jessie Jacob. Among the drawings shown by the pupils of Miss S. R. Canton's class for black and white were some clever studies by Miss Lucy E. Pierce, the winner last summer of the first prize in THE STUDIO competition for pen-and-ink illustrations to a nursery rhyme.

W. T. W.

REVIEWS AND NOTICES.

Modern Art. By JULIUS MEIER-GRAEFE. Translated by FLORENCE SIMMONDS and G. W. CHRYSTAL. (London: W. Heinemann.) 2 vols. £2 2s.—This work is a translation from the German by Miss Florence Simmonds and George W. Chrystal, and a very admirable one, the swift conversational style of the author being retained. Dr. Meier-Graefe believing little in the historico-biographical methods, has set himself to write criticism in a newer line. To us the work seems an attempt to apply the theory of evolution to the tendencies of art, though we are not told so with any clearness. The author searches for the vital element in past traditions, which survives in work of to-day. The introductory chapters are particularly interesting, though pessimistic enough. While admitting that "If the uses of art change, art itself must change," Dr. Meier-Graefe does not seem hopeful about present conditions. He presumes, and we think wrongly so, that the dwelling house of to-day has lost the formal relation to its age which would make it the place for modern art. As to what shall happen to the modern picture when it is painted, if this state of things exists, he merely states the problem, and we find ourselves returning in vain over the chapters for any hint of a solution on his part. Dr. Meier-Graefe generalizes with rapidity, and there is a crudescence of thought on every page, though not always expressed at its worth in the superficiality of phrase. He does not concede genius to Dante Gabriel Rossetti, though it is difficult to know by what other of the many attributes he accords him, he could have contrived to express so distinct a spirit in his painting. One regrets a failure on the part of the author to be responsive to the mood served by the best Pre-Raphaelitism. He writes with a delightful pen of Beardsley, but is unkind in putting forward in rivalry to his intimate art, the clever but merely energetic commonplaces of a German draughtsman. A closing chapter on Young England has the hurried style of a postscript; and of the young school rising up, with no small opinion of itself, from the New English Art Club he does not speak with overwhelming optimism. There are phases of German art into which he enters with a sympathy only permitted to those familiar with the national temperament. His appreciation of many things in art apparently opposed to each other, is interesting. It is possible for an individual of genius to trace and classify the origin of his æsthetic experiences, but to attempt a system of classification which will have a general bearing seems to us an impossible task. Dr. Meier-Graefe, however, has been wonderful in attempting the impossible, and has written even every sentence in an attractive manner. The book is profusely and perfectly illustrated.

Reviews and Notices

Painting in the Far East. By LAURENCE BINYON. (London: Edward Arnold.) 21s. net.—Our knowledge of the art of the East as displayed in painting, in spite of numerous works upon the subject, is at present but superficial. This, to a large extent, is due to the fact that characteristic examples by the great painters are scarcely seen outside Japan and China. It is true that numerous examples bearing the names of great artists find their way into the hands of the Western collector, but these are too commonly either absolutely spurious, or, at best, but inferior specimens of the painter's brushwork. The European writer is therefore severely handicapped in dealing with this subject and is frequently driven to wrong conclusions in his criticisms. On the other hand, the important illustrated works which have in recent years been published in Japan concerning its art and that of China—and we mention in this respect our excellent contemporary "The Kokka"—are of great service in enabling their readers to obtain a glimpse, even if only through the medium of a photograph, of the notable examples existing in private collections in the Far East. The author of "Painting in the Far East," although at a disadvantage by reason of the probable paucity of fine original examples to refer to, has succeeded in producing a valuable résumé of the History of Art in China and Japan which is a welcome addition to our literature upon the subject. Some regret, however, will be felt by lovers of that art at the altogether unrepresentative character of the illustrations to the volume. Badly reproduced by that unsatisfactory medium, the collotype, the selection of examples leaves much to be desired. An intimate knowledge of the technique of Sotatsu, Sesshiu, Tannyu, Hokusai—to name but a few of the great masters—would have justified the author in excluding such inferior and untypical illustrations as are here given. The flower drawing ascribed to Sotatsu is in no sense reminiscent of the free, easy brush line, the large decorative instinct of that painter. Sesshiu is represented by an illustration from "The Kokka" of a drawing, which, however interesting in itself, is far from typical of the forceful work of that great genius. Tannyu's bold but sympathetic brush stroke is unrecognisable in the clumsy mechanical lines of the Monjiu. Hokusai's humour, his characteristic nervous line, his power of composition, are all absent in the scattered, "bitty," unconvincing specimen shown. We might continue our unfavourable comment to at least three-fourths of the illustrations given; and in the cause of art and of simple justice, we would seriously urge the author, should a further edition of his work be contemplated, to entirely reconstruct his series of illustrations. The public is taught better by pictures than by words, however eloquent the latter may be, and when pictures are bad, eulogism fails to be convincing.

Venice: The Decadence. By POMPEO MOLMENTI. Translated by HORATIO F. BROWN. (London: John Murray.) 2 vols. 21s. net.—The appearance of the concluding volumes of Signor Molmenti's "History of Venice" brings to completion a work that is a monument of erudition and patient research. As well translated and as copiously illustrated as its predecessors on Venice in the Middle Ages and Venice in the Golden Age, it tells, in a deeply interesting narrative betraying no sign of effort, though the thoroughness of the study it represents is evident on every page, the melancholy story of the decline of the Queen of the Adriatic from the proud position she had so long occupied. For her, as for the rest of Italy, the knell of prosperity was sounded with the signing, in 1559, of the treaty of Cateau-Cambresis, and although the Lagoon city after that enjoyed a few years of prosperity, signs of decadence were soon apparent on every side. Beginning with a summary of the political situation in Italy in the second half of the 16th century, Signor Molmenti passes on to note the condition of the naval and military forces of the Republic, the relations between Church and State, the condition of industry, commerce and art, noting in every branch of endeavour signs of the beginning of the end. Specially fascinating is the chapter on the Old Town and Modern Art, in which the writer waxes eloquent over the maturity of charm displayed by Venice; but that chapter is surpassed in pathos by the melancholy account of the last days of the once world-famous State when the Great Council met for the last time and the last Doge, Ludovico Manin, resigned the office he was no longer strong enough to hold.

The Art of the Plasterer. By GEORGE P. BANKART. (London: B. T. Batsford.) 25s. net.—Hitherto it has been difficult for the student to obtain anything like a clear idea of the development of plaster work, for though many fine specimens of it still exist in situ or in museums, they are widely scattered, and only those with leisure and means can hope to turn them to account. For this reason the important work under notice, whose author is an architect as well as a practical craftsman, will, no doubt, be widely welcomed, and, it is greatly to be hoped, will do much to inaugurate a much needed reform in the design and execution of decorative stucco. The illustrations, of which there are several hundred, are most of them from excellent photographs taken specially for the book or from geometrical drawings by Mr. Bankart, and include complete buildings, portions of ceilings, façades, etc., some on a large scale, with numerous separate reproductions of details such as rib enrichments, heraldic animals, panels, friezes, etc., culled from an immense variety of sources, beginning with antique stucco-duro and coming down to quite modern plaster work, so that they form a complete pictorial epitome of the plasterer's craft from its first inception to the present day. Perhaps the most valuable section of this book, truly unique of its kind, is that in which the causes of the decline in plaster work in England are examined. Why, asks Mr. Bankart, is the work of the nineteenth century so uninteresting, bad and uncouth? And he replies, "Chiefly because the trade or profession or calling is divorced from pleasurable and legitimate production." Being merely an instrument in the hands of a man who designs without technical knowledge and dictates without personal acquaintance with the material, the workman cannot be expected to put his heart into the business. He concludes with an earnest appeal to young men occupied in the plasterer's trade to study the subject in their leisure time.

Reviews and Notices

The Colour of Paris; Historic, Personal, and Local. By MESSIEURS LES ACADEMICIENS GONCOURT. Under the general editorship of M. LUCIEN DESCAGES. Illustrated by YOSHIO MARKINO. (London: Chatto & Windus.) 20s. net.—This is a companion volume to The Colour of London, published some two years ago and which proved so great a success that Mr. Markino was commissioned by his publishers to go to Paris and execute a series of drawings to illustrate this volume. He had, it seems, never been in Paris before, whereas he had lived in London for ten years, and as a consequence the drawings now reproduced have distinctly the character of first impressions. From the little essay contributed by the artist—which makes very entertaining reading on account of its delightful naïveté—we learn that during the first part of his sojourn in the French metropolis he was afflicted with illness, and as a result he feels obliged to confess that "my art as well as my health suffered terribly." We do not, however, find in the drawings illustrating the volume anything corroborating this admission, but what we do observe is evidence of that further assimilation of European methods which M. Bénédict calls attention to in his appreciative introduction. For our part we regret to see the disappearance of Japanese characteristics from Mr. Markino's drawings; to us these constituted in his earlier drawings one of their principal charms. For all that, there are some capital glimpses of Parisian life and scenery in the book, and here, as before, we note the artist's preference for night effects. The bulk of the letterpress is contributed by members of the Académie Goncourt, who without any waste of words vividly portray the life of Paris under its manifold aspects, public and private. Their essays have been ably translated, and the book as a whole gives one a truer impression of Paris than any book we have come across for a long time.

Vincenzo Foppa of Brescia. By CONSTANCE JOCELYN FFOULKES and Monsignor RODOLFO MAIOCCHI, D.D. (London: John Lane.) £4 4s. net.—The joint work of two thoroughly competent critics and earnest students of Italian art, this richly-illustrated and well written monograph adequately fills one of the very few gaps still left in the copious art criticism of the day. The fact that very little is really known of the reputed founder of the Lombard school of painting has been an added spur to the zeal with which every clue that could throw light on his career has been followed up, the collaborators having diligently searched the libraries and archives of Brescia, Savona, Genoa and other towns, and personally examined every accessible work of the master, with the result that a vast mass of information, some of it quite new to the general public, has been collected. Skilfully woven into an interesting consecutive narrative, the text embodies not only the opinions of the authors themselves but also of the most distinguished European critics of the past and present on Foppa and his school. It is moreover enriched with excellent reproductions of a large number of his works, fifteen in photogravure, and supplemented by an index of all the MSS. quoted, with translations of some of the more important, a chronological list of his extant paintings, one of those now lost, a place index and a carefully compiled subject one, so that the book is a perfect encyclopædia of knowledge that will be a mine of wealth to future students. Some, indeed, will be disposed to cavil at its very completeness, and to argue that undue prominence has been given to a man who, after all, was not of the highest rank; but the general feeling of experts will be one of gratitude to those who have devoted so much time and labour to the elucidation of the problems connected with the Lombard school. Of considerable importance, for instance, is the discovery from documental evidence that the artist under review lived very much longer than is generally supposed, passing away at the age of 89, not 64, so that many paintings now tentatively attributed to other hands may possibly be by him.

Reviews and Notices

Old Interiors in Holland. By K. SLUYTERMAN. (The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff.) £5.—The old buildings of Amsterdam, Haarlem, Leyden, Amerongen, Leersum, Middelburg, Veere, Zierikzee, Delft, The Hague, Maastricht, Nijmegen, Zwolle, Enkhuizen, Edam, Leeuwarden, Groningen and sundry other places in the Netherlands, have furnished the illustrations for this work—a canvas portfolio containing 100 fine collotype reproductions of photographs, displaying a choice selection of the rare treasures which Holland possesses in the way of old furniture and interior appointments. A large number of the interiors presented belong to public or quasi-public buildings, and they have been selected because they retain to a large extent the features which they had originally. The letterpress is confined to a description of the plates taken seriatim, and in this is given information concerning the building and also of the various component parts of the interior illustrated.

From the offices of "Academy Architecture," 58 Theobalds Road, London, we have received a volume entitled Sculptures (8s. net), edited by ALEX. KOCH, Architect, in which excellent reproductions are given of all the sculptures published in Vols. 25 to 34 of that publication, covering the years 1904 to 1908. The works illustrated have been selected from the chief exhibitions in London, Paris, and elsewhere.

Messrs. Frost and Reed, of Bristol and London, are publishing, in strictly limited editions, two large photogravure prints after pictures by Mr. C. Napier Hiemy, A.R.A., Fair Wind—Fine Weather and The Last Reef Down, both of which were exhibited in last year's Royal Academy. The reproduction of these two fine examples of marine painting is all that could be desired.

It is pretty generally agreed that the pictures usually found in schools leave much to be desired from an artistic point of view. No objection of this kind can be urged against such prints as that reproduced on this page, which is from a lithograph designed by Mr. HEYWOOD SUMNER, printed in outline and coloured by hand. It is one of the "Fitzroy" series published by Messrs. G. Bell & Sons to meet the need for a better quality of school picture than the crude and uninteresting productions one so often sees displayed in class rooms. The original print measures 26 by 24 inches, and is sold at 3s. 6d. net.

Our Vienna Correspondent desires us to state that the etching by Ferdinand Schmutzer called The News of the Day, which was reproduced in our December number (page 195), is one of which the copyright belongs to the Gesellschaft für Vervielfältigende Kunst, Vienna. This society published last year a large etching by the same artist, called Die Klostersuppe, a proof of which was included in the exhibition of Prof. Schmutzer's etchings recently held at the Baillie Gallery.

COLOURED LITHOGRAPH BY HEYWOOD SUMNER
(Published by G. Bell & Sons).

The Lay Figure

THE LAY FIGURE: ON THINKING FOR ONESELF.

"I CANNOT understand why there should be growing up in certain quarters such an extraordinary antipathy to the works of the Old Masters," said the Expert. "There seems to be now a particular clique which takes pleasure in reviling everything that has been handed down to us from other times. I think this clique is a small one, but it is noisy and energetic, and it may possibly have some misleading influence if steps are not taken to check its activity."

"Has it never struck you that this clique, as you call it, may express the sentiments of a considerable section of the modern art world?" enquired the Art Critic. "Do you not see in what you profess to regard as merely a noisy agitation signs of a coming change in the popular opinion?"

"But why should there be a change coming?" cried the Expert. "Where is the need for change? Have we not arrived in recent years at a truer appreciation of the value and importance of the work of the Old Masters than our predecessors ever had? Modern criticism has taught us what an inestimable inheritance we have from the past, and surely to protest against this teaching is as ungracious as it is futile."

"Surely we may protest if we consider this teaching to be wrong," said the Critic. "Modern criticism is not necessarily infallible, and people who can see the weak points in it are right in pointing out, and objecting to, what they believe to be mistakes."

"Are you, too, going to take sides against the Old Masters?" exclaimed the Expert. "What folly! You would destroy the tradition which has been built up by a host of clever investigators! You would encourage contempt for the work of the ancients! Why, what have you to offer in its place?"

"I offer you modern art," said the Critic.

"Modern art!" sneered the Expert. "What art is there to-day? You are talking about something that does not exist. Art died a century or two ago, and there are no modern men who can bring it to life again."

"May I say a word on the subject?" asked the Art Patron. "I have bought a good many works by modern artists, and so I think I am entitled to give some opinion about what is being done to-day."

"By all means," laughed the Expert. "If you are not ashamed to confess your unenlightenment, pray let us hear what you think."

"If it is a sign of unenlightenment to see good in modern art, I am unenlightened indeed," returned the Art Patron, "because I say that the bulk of the old stuff you would force upon me is utterly dull and incompetent. I prefer the fresher outlook and the sounder methods of the men of my own time."

"You prefer the raw, immature, purposeless bungling of to-day to the magnificent achievement of the past!" cried the Expert. "Then you are indeed past praying for. Your case decidedly is incurable."

"I hope it is," replied the Art Patron; "for I am quite satisfied with my condition. You forget that I have as much right to my opinion as you have to yours. You say there is no art to-day; I say there is, and that it is better than nine-tenths of the old work—better both in intention and achievement."

"And so you buy it?" asked the Expert.

"Exactly," said the Art Patron. "I buy it because I believe in it; and you can, if you please, count me as one of the clique which protests against the over-adulation of the Old Masters. You want me to worship a sham, an idol that you and your fellows have set up. I refuse because I doubt your disinterestedness and will not accept your dictation. And I have the advantage over you, for I have studied modern art all my life, face to face and honestly, and I have always looked sincerely for what is best in it, while you have habitually despised and ignored it."

"I do not ignore it," protested the Expert; "I deny that it exists."

"Your denials do not alter facts," laughed the Art Patron; "nor do they prove that I am not justified in thinking for myself. You think I am a fool, while you seem to me but a dreary pedant who must always be harking back centuries for your opinions. Why, if you had lived in the time of these very masters whom you talk so much about now, you would have complained that their work was raw and immature and not like that of some archaic person who had existed ages earlier. You are sadly behind the times, my friend, and you impertinently arrogate to yourself an authority to which you are not entitled. Leave me alone; go away and preach your fallacies to the people you can deceive; I am tired of having you always at my elbow, telling me what I must do and must not do."

"And so am I," said the Critic.

THE LAY FIGURE.

The Miniature Exhibition

THE MINIATURE EXHIBITION AT THE KNOEDLER GALLERIES BY ARTHUR HOEBER

THAT the American Society of Miniature Painters should have arrived at the tenth anniversary of its formation, having held each year an exhibition, is perhaps excuse for a serious consideration of its aims, purposes and accomplishments. That it should have made ten creditable displays, attracted the attention of a discriminating public and gathered under its banners as exhibitors this season no less than sixty-eight workers in this medium is surely a record that establishes its claim to attention. The lower gallery at Knoedler & Co.'s makes a dainty showing and one is conscious of serious efforts along artistic lines, for these men and women disclose personality, skill, taste and artistic judgment in the various little portraits that are offered in this most charming of all means of representing humanity.

The painting in water color on ivory is, indeed, a metier that has to be learned quite by itself. It differs entirely from work in oil or water color on paper. There are tricks, special ways and means, and the individual point of view counts here quite as much as in other mediums. And some of these

THE ROSE GOWN

BY MRS. LUCIA
FAIRCHILD FULLER

MARGARET
WRIGHT-CLARK

BY WILLIAM J.
BAER

workers have a touch broad and vigorous, free and masterly, as have their fellows in oil, while there are others who arrive at a surprising detail, which would seem to indicate infinite pains beyond human patience. Somewhere between the two methods, perhaps, lies the proper path, for the miniature may be too broad as it may be overfatigued, and, perhaps, none of the contributors strikes a happier method than Lucia Fairchild Fuller, whose The Rose Gown is of an exquisite daintiness, a synthetic humaneness and an artistic observation that are no less in evidence than the delightful craftsmanship that produces the result. Here are draperies treated with alluring simplicity and directness, tones of decorative quality of charm, a personal arrangement and treatment, yet no sense of fatigue. It is a complete work in petto, a well-considered composition worthy serious attention. Nor is the double

The Miniature Exhibition

IN THE NURSERY

BY WILLIAM J.
WHITTEMORE

portrait of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Aldrich by Mrs. Fuller less dexterously evolved. The woman seems complete mistress of her medium and works with the solid foundation of academic training, of taste and a sense of values most rare. She is one of the eleven members represented.

Skilful, indeed, is the president of the society,

XIV

William J. Baer, who has limned the beauty of adolescence as well as the riper charms of middle age. Perhaps none of the contributors possesses to a greater degree the unerring, scholarly touch. He is an authority on the subject and his experience is large in such matters. The Nymph, by Laura Coombs Hills, is a study in varied blues of an attractive young woman. There is breadth of treatment combined with a fluency of brushwork and a decorative sense of color, all very individual, that give the work distinction. Alice Beckington, in a sober portrait of a lady in black, impresses one by the sincerity, the directness and the human note, while her little Brother is no less worthy, and these qualities are noteworthy in the two offerings by Mabel R. Welch, the portraits of Mrs. Calkins and of Master MacLean. Miss Welch is one of the most promising of the newer miniature painters and her work has attracted much interest.

For a picturesque touch the little nude of the child In the Nursery, by William J. Whittemore, is one of the most attractive things here. This painter, who is no less at home in his oils, invariably finds a pic-

MRS. EARNEST
ELMO CALKINS

BY MABEL R.
WELCH

The Miniature Exhibition

turesque point of view and in particular the allure of youth appeals to his brush. There are four contributions by him here and none is without interest. The dignified portrait of a matron, a lady with a straw bonnet on, with curling, grayish hair, is signed by Jenny Delony Rice. It is a most seriously painted ivory, wherein the character has been honestly searched for and apparently admirably caught, while the workmanship is competent; and here is a head of Martin Kimbell by Eda Nemoede, one of the best of the contributions, that demands special attention. This is so large in conception, so thoroughly simple in the rendering and so impassively just in construction as to hold the spectator, yet it covers but a few inches of space. Good art this and worthy the best traditions of miniature work. Carlola Saint-Gaudens offers three portraits. One is of Percy MacKaye, seated in an easy pose. It is an intimate sort of portrait, bringing the man before one agreeably and naturally, and the painting is executed with ability and frankness. One of the contributors, Helen W. Durkee, has made a little study of still life, a copper pot and some onions, which are cleverly indicated, but which, beyond the entertainment in the painting, serves little purpose that we can see. Yet all is well done and one marvels at the patience displayed, at the dexterity and the serious observation.

It is interesting to recall that the earliest miniatures were painted on vellum and that ivory did not come into use until about the end of the Seventeenth century. The great Holbein did not disdain to turn his attention to miniatures, and many of the prominent artists ever since have dabbled from time to time in this medium. It is certainly a fascinating way of working and the results are such as to hold the worker profoundly interested. In her four examples Alice Schille, for example, has experimented in various directions, painting at times with the freedom one associates with an oil on a large canvas. This lady dashes in a study here in a bold manner, or she paints a likeness of a Girl with a Parrot in a spontaneous way, getting sweeps of the brush that are suggestive of enthusiastic interest in her work.

THE NYMPH

BY LAURA COOMBS HILLS

Maria J. Strean, in the portrait of a lady in blue, works with grace and facility, and in another of a baby the infantile suggestiveness of pose, the delicacy of textures and the unconsciousness of the arrangement are all convincing as well as impressive. The young girl seated, by Margaret Kendall, with hand in lap and blond hair done up in a ribbon, is another lovely transcript of childhood. One may study this with profit, for it is rendered with much faithful lingering over details, with a delicate color scheme of whites and pale blues, and it is well drawn. Indeed, one is impressed with much capital draughtsmanship throughout the display. A nude child, A Babe in Eden, by Anna Richards Brewster, is an

PORTRAIT

BY ALICE BECKINGTON

The Miniature Exhibition

MARTIN KIMBELL

BY EDA NEMOEDE

entertaining study of flesh out of doors, the baby wandering among flowers and growing stuff, and in May Austin Claus's Girl in Blue the seated figure of a young woman has the head reflected in a mirror, which is accomplished with dexterity and reasonableness and makes a pleasant break in the matter of composition.

These breaks are welcome, too, for, after all, one is inclined to weary just a trifle at the succession of portrait after portrait, for it is generally when the painter is happy in the sitter that the best work ensues. Not all humanity was created to be reproduced by the painter, but, alas, commissions do not always depend on the fitness of the model, so it must be a delight when one is called upon to portray dignified old age, such as the portrait by Frances A. L. Walker, whose elderly lady in white hair and shawl has so much of tenderness to it; or the frank charm of a girlish beauty, as in Mrs. Myrick's portrait of a child with a blue cloak and hat. In both of these one feels certain the artists worked with joy and sympathy and naturally these are qualities that add much. The exhibition fortunately has struck a responsive note and attracts a large attendance. For long the foreign worker dominated the field. There have been many displays of their ivories at the galleries of the dealers, while travelers overseas have given them commissions in their native lands. Happily, it is dawning on the American that the talent at home is worthy of consideration, in miniatures as in other directions, and as encouragement stimulates the recent years disclose healthy progress, of which this tenth annual show of the American Society of Miniature Painters is a distinct sign.

XVI

SPRING BOOKS FOR STAY-AT-HOMES AND TRAVELERS

MR. LORING UNDERWOOD, author of "The Garden and Its Accessories," previously reviewed in these pages, has issued through Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York, a convenient journal for the use of persons actively interested in gardening, under the title, "A Garden Diary and Country-Home Guide."

The diary may be begun at any time and should be found helpful to record many outdoor happenings besides gardening and greenhouse experiences.

Information is given at the top of each page which bears upon the seasons, and an index follows with lists of plant names. The author aims to give briefly the result of his garden experiences and observations, and to make a convenient journal.

ILLUSTRATED with reproductions of a series of interesting photographs taken by the author, Mr. Philip S. Marden's "Greece and the Ægean Islands" will commend itself at this season to many tourists now taking their way to the Grecian Archipelago. The book will be welcome to persons intending to visit Greece and should tempt others to the historic mainland and the islands of Delos, Samos, Rhodes, Thera, Cos and Crete.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. B.

BY JENNY DELONY RICE

"Have nothing in your houses that you do not know to be useful, or believe to be beautiful."—WILLIAM MORRIS.

The National Society of Home Art and Decoration

The purposes of this society are as follows:

1. To secure the adoption by building contractors, architects and owners of better standards of design and decoration in the average American homes, city, village and country.
2. To urge the study of the principles of home art, architecture and decoration in schools and educational organizations.
3. To take part in the exhibitions of architectural and arts and crafts societies, with a view to the assembling of designs and examples bearing upon the subject.
4. To conduct through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO a department of suggestions to readers and members of the society, and also to conduct an established inquiry department, through which, by publication or personal replies, information bearing in any way upon the subject may be readily secured in so far as expert authorities and careful consideration can supply it.

5. To keep members informed concerning publications and exhibitions, through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO, and the bulletins and publications that the society may be called upon to issue.

6. To cooperate with local clubs and associations in supplying exhibitions, lectures, lantern-slides, etc.

An advisory committee of eminent specialists will shortly be elected, and their services invited in their several capacities.

For information concerning MEMBERSHIP, apply to the Treasurer, Mr. Pendleton Dudley, 34 Pine Street, New York.

NUMBER 1. A TYPE OF DOOR IN HARMONY WITH THE HEAVY LONG LINES AND STRONG CONSTRUCTIVE MATERIALS OF THE HOUSE

ENTRANCE DOORS AND WINDOWS

THE best of the modern small houses designed to-day are complete in every detail which makes for the convenience and comfort of living, and in many of these the picturesque qualities are strong. The entrance doors and windows are features which go far toward establishing the individuality of and giving character to the house.

Illustration number one shows a type of front door which is in entire harmony with the heavy long lines and strong constructive materials of the house to which it is the entrance. The sense of security which the weather-stained sturdy oak panels of the simple door conveys is equaled by its inviting hospitality. When thrown wide its generous dimensions allow an extensive view of the rooms within. The small-paned, shuttered windows, set deep in the gray cement walls, complement the style of the door perfectly. The stain and flat dull finish used upon the door reproduces the effect wrought by time and weather and is entirely suited to the architectural scheme.

Entrance Doors and Windows

NUMBER 2. THE HOOD AND DETAIL OF THIS DOOR SHOW A SUGGESTION OF THE SWISS CHALET

Now that cement and concrete have taken so leading a place in building materials it behooves us to study well the architectural style which is best suited to this medium. There are many offerings in the way of original designs embodying this material which are more or less attractive. In the very recent past the architectural peculiarities of some of the modern German houses would have in no wise appealed to the American householder, but the quaint and somewhat artificial style of the German house is beginning to find its advocates among us, as being a type to which concrete is especially well suited.

The many windows set almost flush with the surface of the walls and the entrance hood with the cement bracket, the sunken door painted white and flanked by red-tubbed, close-clipped box trees, present a picture of inviting trimness and comfort which may appeal to some more than the bungalow type of the house shown in the picture.

The cottage casement window with its swinging sash, set with squared or diamond panes, is well suited to the style of house shown in illustration number two. Here a suggestion of the Swiss chalet is felt in the rustic hood and the detail of the front door, which is wholly in harmony with the general style of the house. Casement windows may be correctly embodied in the same house, or even the same room, with French windows. This latter type presents practically two glass doors. These may show two of more large panes or repeat the diamond or squared panes of the casement.

In this day of hygienic living and supremacy of fresh air many houses are planned with sleeping porches, which have sliding glass for their upper walls, or canvas screens. The French window giving directly upon such a porch from the room within is found more practical than the ordinary door.

Where there is a suggestion of the Colonial in the architectural style of the house this can safely be emphasized in the front door, although if the house is small it should not be elaborated. Long leaded sidelights with a fan-shaped transom above the paneled door, which should be painted white, is an excellent type to select, combining as it does dignity and simplicity. Cottage casement windows are unsuited to the house in which such a door is appropriate, although the long casement window with stationary upper glass may be used in a house of Colonial suggestion.

Many houses built on simple lines, after the so-called craftsman design, may be appropriately fitted with what is known as the Dutch door. This door is constructed in two halves, each swinging independent of the other if desired. The lower half may remain closed while the upper is opened for light and air. Provision is made for bolting the two halves together. Often such a door is completed by seats flanking either side of the entrance. Many of the old shingle and stone houses built by the early Dutch settlers in the States of New York and Pennsylvania show excellent examples of this type of door. Sliding windows, the sash set with small squared panes, harmonize best with doors of this character.

In remodeling a house most effective improvements may be made by changing the style of the entrance doors and windows. The substitution of new sash in a window opening is not at all a difficult or expensive operation. A modern modification of the old-fashioned bow window is shown in the accompanying illustration. Such a window, while improving the effect of the exterior of the house, forms a most decorative and delightful feature for the interior. Its wide sill may become the receptacle for pots of flowering plants or feathery ferns. In the way of drapery it should be treated simply with muslin or net curtains extending only to the sill. Lengths of silk or plain-colored fabric may be used at either end and between each window with good effect.

Entrance Doors and Windows

In curtaining the casement windows slender brass rods should be set as close as possible to the glass on the window frame. The net or muslin should be run upon this by a narrow casing, loose enough to slip readily. Such curtains should extend only to the sill and be finished with a three-inch hem if otherwise untrimmed. If overdraperies of silk, linen crash, Arras cloth, cretonne or linen taffeta are desired these should hang at either end of the window, and for bedrooms or cottage living-rooms an eight-inch valance may be added, extending entirely across the top of the window, and made from the same material as the overdraperies.

In curtaining French windows the material should be run on rods set at the top and bottom of each door and drawn tautly in place.

In placing curtains in openings or doorways the height of the opening does not necessarily regulate the length of the curtain, as frequently where the opening is very high the rod can be set ten or twelve inches from the top with good effect, leaving this space above.

Where the pronounced color scheme makes it necessary to use different materials and color for the two sides of the curtains they should be joined without interlining and finished along the lower edge and sides with gimps or one-quarter inch moss fringe, matching in color the curtain to which it is applied. Such curtains should preferably be run directly upon a rod run by a loose casing at the top; this will insure well-hanging folds.

NUMBER 3. A MODERN MODIFICATION OF THE OLD-FASHIONED BOW WINDOW, A DELIGHTFUL FEATURE FOR BOTH EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR

Henry Rankin Poore

THE MOVABLE STUDIO

USED BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

HENRY RANKIN POORE BY FREDERICK W. COBURN

HENRY RANKIN POORE was known to most of us a few years ago as a clever painter of animals. He clearly was fond of dogs and horses and of all pursuits connected with their keeping. He lived the suburban life near Philadelphia, it was understood, and was accustomed himself to ride to the hounds, squire fashion. Backlog Reveries, shown at the Pan-American Exposition, a representation of an elderly gentleman and two great dogs, revealed by flickering firelight, was a very successful achievement in genre painting. Other solidly executed pictures of sporting subjects and landscapes containing animals are recalled by those who have followed the leading exhibitions of the past fifteen years.

Too many American painters only repeat what they have done. Mr. Poore has happily been saved from succumbing to the habit of repetition which, acquired at the height of professional capacity, leads often to commercial success, to artistic failure. He has continued to think and to experiment. His convictions as to the fundamental principles of the art of painting were set forth a short time ago in a book on composition and the critical judgment of pictures. This has gone through several editions. Another book is now in preparation.

The work which has been published has proved most useful to art students and to laymen. Com-

THE FIRST FURROW—SPRING

BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

Henry Rankin Poore

parison is inevitably suggested by it with books of the same general nature by Arthur W. Dow and Denman W. Ross. Mr. Poore's treatment is certainly more comprehensive than that in either of these well-known books. He considers carefully, for instance, the effect upon balance of gradation of tone—a subject which is liable to be ignored in present-day interest in arrangement of flat masses. The book has its special application to photography as well as draughtsmanship. Its success, incidentally, led to the author's being invited to teach the subject of composition at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, taking charge of the class formerly conducted by Henry Thouron in a school which, by reason of its liberal scholarships, has been able to draw to Philadelphia many of the most talented candidates for professional honors.

Painting a series of "Landscapes of New England Winter" from a movable studio drawn by oxen from place to place was an accomplishment of recent date which directed public attention to Mr. Poore's work just as he was painting the most notable pictures he has produced thus far. To a considerable degree he has laid aside his animal painting, feeling that landscape offers a much wider scope. The works, shown in New York, Boston and other cities, have everywhere been greeted with favorable comment.

Both the limitations and the excellencies that have appeared up to this time should be conceded. A great colorist Mr. Poore has not proved himself to be, though his understanding of tone makes his color almost invariably very agreeable. His art is formed by severe study of human and animal anatomy. It displays the facts of form through the medium of color rather than as incidental to it. A certain justness of appreciation of temperamental capacity undoubtedly appears in the painter's own informal estimate: "I realize that color, for the sake of color, does not make an especial appeal to me, but, rather, that sentiment in nature which touches me with especial directness when she is shorn of most of her glorious adornments. Perhaps it is the melancholy flavor which gets me. At any rate it is reserve in art, as a quality, which most appeals to me, and this, no doubt, I look for in nature."

Under the spell of the country about Lyme, on the north side of Long Island Sound, Mr. Poore in the past three years has painted landscapes of a serious and subdued character that seem destined to be of abiding interest. The region in which he has worked is known in glimpses to all who travel over the Shore Line between New York and Boston—a land of thin soil and frequent outcroppings of gray rock, sown to rye and oats a century ago but with tilled fields now reverted to pasture, with pastures gradually filling up with gray-birch and oak. It is God's own land to live upon, the devil's own to live from.

Over this country of beautiful line and somewhat melancholy color Mr. Poore has painted winter after winter. His plan of the movable studio has made possible a thoroughness of preparation for each picture which would otherwise be out of the question in the cold-weather months. His larger works are not always painted directly from nature, but the studies upon which they are based are carried far beyond the state of pochades.

The idea of the peregrinating painter's camp has lain with Mr. Poore for a long time, for about sixteen years ago, after returning from Europe, he built a movable studio. This served for one win-

THE BOWLER

BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

Henry Rankin Poore

UNDER THE WINTER SUN

BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

little in abeyance, of suffused rather than dazzling effects, of line that breaks off and resumes rather than insists, of color rather iridescent than radiant. This is one man's interesting way of portraying the New England country when it is bare of floral and other adventitious adornments—when, to follow Mr. James's analogy, the feminine charms are to be seen in dishabille. To the voluptuousness of the curvature of Connecticut hillsides draped in new snow, the sunlit hollows full of tones of violet and murex, the passages of light warm with saffron and rose, Mr. Poore has, ter's painting, though not altogether satisfactorily, since the artist made the mistake of placing it on wheels and thus enforcing too high a point of view.

The present studio at Lyme sits tight upon the ground, in order, as Mr. Poore says, "to avoid a plunging view of the foreground." The runners are just high enough to clear casual outcropping rocks. Four oxen drag the little house anywhere over the bare ground. On the snow a single yoke suffices. The studio has four plate-glass windows, one in each side. Double floors, heavy woolen rugs and an oil stove obviate any necessity of painting with numbed fingers, the bane of outdoor work in the New England winter.

The joy of painting winter landscape with sense of hardship and irritation eliminated has manifested itself in the artist's works. Varied attractiveness is a distinguishing mark of the New England countryside; for each man there are motives suited to his prevailing moods. Henry James lately spoke of our landscape, reviewed after many years, as peculiarly feminine; and, deprived ages ago by the glaciers of hard protuberances, its characteristic line, full of curves and sinuosities, undoubtedly has something of the charm of the female figure, to which charm a very variable climate adds the semper mutabile of moods and tenses. In interpreting this landscape Mr. Poore's pictures make an impression of slightly suppressed enthusiasm. For others are hilarity, abandon, hurry. His is the pleasure of displaying powers that are still held a perhaps, given but little attention. But the friendliness of the derobed earth mother, even in her moods of gentle melancholy, has been very adequately set forth. Consider as works of excellent artistic connotation The Oak, with the grain of the wood delineated in the newly hewn butts, and the pair of steers dark against the haze, ready to haul the gifts of earth for human uses; The Shepherd following his sun-touched flock over a shapely outcrop of the granite; The Sandpit, displaying, though not for the geologist's analysis, the substructure of the land; In the Clearing, with its intimation of the beauties often inherent in scragginess; The First Furrow, its sky an epic of the waxing light, its soil a lyric of springtime; The Boulder, with its admirable sense of force in the figures straining to shove a shard of granite upon a sledge; Clearing Land, with its revelation of the cobbly roughness of surface that must be dilapidated in order to become productive. These and other pictures of the New England winter series certainly entitle the painter to a high place among living artists.

For such an achievement, reached in the years just approaching the age of fifty, a long course of preparation can be traced back to undergraduate days at the University of Pennsylvania where Mr. Poore was of the class of 1883. His technical training in drawing and painting was gained at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and the Academy of Design, New York, and with Lumenais and Bou-

NEW ENGLAND WINTER
BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

Henry Rankin Poore

CLEARING LAND

BY HENRY RANKIN POORE

guereau in Paris. Painting professionally during the past twenty years he has received various rewards and insignia—the twenty-five hundred dollar Harper prize of some years back, the two thousand dollar prize of the American Art Association, a Hallgarten medal of the National Academy, a bronze medal at Buffalo and a silver medal at St. Louis.

Among pictures by Mr. Poore that have been favorably noted at the big exhibitions of the last few years and elsewhere are such canvases as those of his classical period in which he painted Ulysses Feigning Madness, Actæon Slain by His Own Hands, Nymphs at Dawn Discovering Pan Asleep, and other notable compositions; The Close of a City Day, reproduced as one of the illustrations of American art in the German Encyclopedia of Art; The Night of the Nativity; The Plowing of the Ephrata Brethren, an episode in the early settlement of Pennsylvania, exhibited at the Pennsylvania Academy's show in 1899; The Potato Harvest, displayed under the auspices of the same society in 1902. At the Louisiana Purchase Exposition a notable contribution was Frosty Morning, a daring feat in the way of painting the sun through a thick haze. At Buffalo the painter was represented by three works, Fox Hounds, Backlog Reveries and The Wounded Hound. I recall at the 1905 and 1906 exhibitions of the Boston Art Club four interesting pictures, Clearing Land, The Red Cliff, the Old English Stag Hounds, and Sunburst after a Shower.

XXIV

How good American landscape painting is, thanks to our traditions of severe training in draughtsmanship in the schools and to methods of study of the phenomena of nature face to face, most of us really appreciate only when there is opportunity for direct comparison of the work of our men with those of other countries. Surprise was occasioned about a year ago at the summer exhibition of the Copley Society in Boston when there were brought together in adjoining rooms a collection of representative canvases by Scandinavian painters and a collection of the everyday work of living Americans. As comparison was made the honors, according to universal testimony, rested on this side. Our men have gone a long distance since the Chicago Exposition.

Following out the idea of comparison, it would be an entertaining thing to bring together the works of such a painter as Henry Poore and of almost any strong foreign artist who paints in a somewhat similar spirit. Such a test would, perhaps, tend to reveal what a few collectors of "Americans" have been preaching these many years, that nowhere is better landscape painting being done than in the United States.

IN HIS recent illustrated biographical memoir of Aubrey Beardsley (John Lane Company, New York) Robert Ross says: "To compare Beardsley with any of his contemporaries would be unjust to them and to him. He belonged to no school and can leave no legend in the sense that Rossetti, Whistler and Professor Legros have done; he proclaimed no theory; he left no counsel of perfection to those who came after him. In England and America a horde of depressing disciples aped his manner with a singular want of success, while admirable and painstaking artists modified their own convictions in the cause of unpopularity with fatal results. The sensuous charm of Beardsley's imagination and his mode of expression have only a superficial resemblance to the foreign masters of black and white."

In the Galleries

IN THE GALLERIES BY HAROLD BENTLEY

JAN V. CHELMINSKI is an interesting painter who shows at the Knoedler Galleries, 355 Fifth Avenue, from time to time pictures of military subjects, the wars and campaigns of Napoleon the Great interesting him always and furnishing many a theme for his brush. He is said to have one of the finest collections of military costumes of that period extant in his Paris studio. Time was when Mr. Chelminski occupied a studio at the Sherwood, in this city, but always he remained faithful to his compositions relating to the "Little Corporal," and just at present he has a work showing Napoleon in the high Alps, on his return from Milan. The Emperor is seated in a carriage accompanied by a train of soldiers and his staff. The gorgeous dress of these last, the elaborate shako and paraphernalia, the trappings, all in the light of present-day equipment so unnecessary, make at any rate a brilliant pictorial arrangement for the artist, and here we have, in passing, a view of some lake, the great snow-clad hills and the long line of accompanying troops. In contradistinction there is a recent effort of the distinguished Dutchman, J. H. Kever, in the shape of a large canvas of an interior with mother and children. An infant is on the knee of the woman, while another child is by her side. It is all painted with alluring breadth and charm, in appetizing color and with facile brush, while the disposition of light and shade is admirably managed. These Dutchmen seem to render such subjects with exceeding

Courtesy of M. Knoedler & Co.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN

BY J. H. KEVER

pathos and humanity, and this man is one of the best of the group. A painting by an American, George de Forest Brush, called the Weaver, shows one of the Indian tribes of the great Southwest at a loom. Save for a breechcloth he is quite nude, and with solemn visage he applies himself to his task, the painting being finished and worked out to the last degree with that care and seriousness that have always characterized Mr. Brush. It is of his middle period, for of recent years he has devoted himself almost entirely to portrait groups.

DOUGLAS VOLK'S remembered painting, The Maid of the Manor, is hung in one of the upper Knoedler rooms.

Courtesy of M. Knoedler & Co.

BETWEEN MILAN AND PARIS, 1804

BY JAN V. CHELMINSKI

In the Galleries

Courtesy of Frederick Keppel & Co.

ROTHERHITHE

BY WHISTLER

WHISTLER is always a potent name whereby to attract the visitor to the gallery. It has been used many times with success and never more so than at the exhibition at the Keppel Galleries, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, where over one hundred prints were recently shown, some of the plates being most rare. Familiar ones there were among the lot, old friends such as the ever-enjoyable Bibi Lalouette, with its lovely lad seated; the Rotherhithe, with its mass of shipping, its warehouses and the two sailors in the foreground; The Forge, an "audacious dry-point," as Mr. Wedmore called it, which was made at Perros Guirec, in Brittany, in 1861; the Unsafe Tenement, one of his early etchings, wherein he essayed sunlight, to which effects he was not often given, and The Music Room, with three figures of Sir Seymour Haden, his wife and Mr. Traer, the latter an assistant to the eminent surgeon. They are in the room at 62 Sloane Street, London, where Mr. Whistler painted his famous Music Room picture. One of the rarest and most important portrait etchings is Annie Haden, the standing figure, a gem in its way, and of the liveliest interest in its big feeling, its certainty of line and delicate effect withal. The portrait of Florence Leyland, an impression from the collection of the late Queen Victoria, is a superb early one, and there is the Adam and Eve Tavern, at Old Chelsea, which Joseph Pennell declared is one of the most interesting things Whistler ever did. But there are many differing themes, English, Dutch, French and Venetian, and none is without interest, none but bears the mark of this remarkable etcher, who touched nothing with his needle that he did not dignify, and always the printing is worth serious attention, for there are none that did not pass the scrutiny of the author, who was the most severe critic. With the years these prints of course are taking on a greater price, for not only is the collector realizing their artistic value but the number of collectors is greatly augmenting, and there are simply not enough prints to go round. These galleries, by the way, are full of souvenirs of Whistler, for Mr. Keppel has been an assiduous collector of Whistleriana in the shape of books, letters and documents, as well as prints, and his own misunderstanding with the artist, which resulted in one of the most stinging letters that the etcher ever wrote, has not abated Mr. Keppel's interest in him. Indeed, Mr. Keppel has had this letter reproduced in facsimile.

XXVI

Courtesy of Frederick Keppel & Co.

BIBI LALOUETTE

BY WHISTLER

The Maryland Institute

NEW BUILDING MARYLAND INSTITUTE

PELL AND CORBETT, ARCHITECTS

THE MARYLAND INSTITUTE BY HENRY H. SAYLOR

THERE is nothing that does a city so much good as a conflagration. Fire comes like the blast of winter to lay low all growth, but only that Spring in all her glorious energy may bring forth still greater beauty in the land. Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Baltimore—each has stood aghast, stunned by the awful havoc of the flames. And then has come the rebound of man's indomitable will and the work has gone on, strengthened by a very flood of new-born energy.

So it has been with an institution that seems woven into the warp and woof of Baltimore's civic life, The Maryland Institute for the Promotion of the Mechanic Arts. Founded in 1826 it lived but a brief nine years before its first fire utterly destroyed the buildings. Not until 1847 did it recover and reorganize, devoting itself to the teaching of art and design in night schools. Later, in 1854, as the school's usefulness began making itself more widely felt, a day school was established, and both day and night classes have continued uninterruptedly with great success.

In 1903 the board of managers announced that 30,839 students had received instruction in these night schools. What this opportunity for education means to the wage earners of the city and State can hardly be appreciated by those who have not had to win their learning through downright personal endeavor and sacrifice. It is to the lad forced by circumstances to enter the industrial ranks as a raw recruit that the Maryland Institute extends its welcome hand, offering through free scholarships or for a merely nominal tuition fee the best and most practical training.

It is not generally understood to what extent drawing enters into the industrial activities of our modern life. But the wage earner knows that his way is blocked unless he gains the ability to read working drawings—an ability that comes only through well-guided practice in making such drawings.

Mr. James Frederick Hopkins, the present director, to whom I am indebted for this history of the Institute, tells me that not long ago he had the opportunity of asking a body of men in the evening drawing-classes why they had undertaken the work, which of necessity demanded at least some financial outlay, a considerable expenditure of time and a sacrifice of almost all recreation. Drawing was required in their business, said they almost all, and it was in order to learn drawing—to be worthy of higher positions and higher salaries—that these earnest men were working so faithfully in their

The Maryland Institute

MARYLAND
INSTITUTE

PELL AND CORBETT
ARCHITECTS

night classes. Perhaps the whole pitiful yet inspiring story was summed up in the words of one member, who frankly said: "I had hardly enough to pay my board, but I came because I wanted a technical education."

At this time, in 1903, the equipment devoted to the interests of the Institute represented an outlay of $175,000. It included a splendid collection of all the most important casts of antique figures and heads, specimens of design in wrought iron, stained glass, ceramics, terra cotta and architectural details. Thus stood the Institute until February 7, 1904, when, on that memorable Sunday evening of the Baltimore fire—and curiously enough, on the anniversary of the conflagration which destroyed the old Institute sixty-nine years before—building, museum, library and art treasures, accumulated during more than half a century, were turned to ashes.

XXVIII

Truly it was enough to stagger those earnest workers who had, by slow degrees, built this splendid institution. And yet, on the following morning, while the fire still raged, the managers, faculty, administrative officers, and even the janitor and his staff, gathered at President Carter's office to map out the immediate resumption of the school's work. Temporary quarters for individual classes were immediately found in halls, storage lofts, studios and private houses. The mayor and city council granted the use of two large market buildings, and in these, with generous gifts and adequate appropriations, the entire Institute was rehabilitated and put in shape to resume its good work on the opening of the school year in October.

The rest of the institution's history reads like a fairy tale. From the partially repudiated insurance policies came $70,000; the State, with almost un-

MARYLAND
INSTITUTE

PELL AND CORBETT
ARCHITECTS

The Maryland Institute

MARYLAND
INSTITUTE

PELL AND CORBETT
ARCHITECTS

paralleled generosity, appropriated $175,000; Mr. Andrew Carnegie offered the princely donation of $263,000, and Mr. Michael Jenkins and his sisters presented a magnificent building site on the Mt. Royal Avenue Boulevard. And not the least among an appreciative public's manifestations of its regard was the erection by the city of a series of new market buildings, on the site of the old Institute, the largest of which was arranged adequately to accommodate one thousand pupils in the night schools.

Of the new art school building little need be said. In recognition of the beauty of its chaste Italian design its architects, Messrs. Pell & Corbett, of New York, were awarded by the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects the 1908 medal for the most notable work of the year. The building's location on Mt. Royal Avenue, a high, level site, fronting on one of Baltimore's main thoroughfares to the park and suburbs, free from noise and dust, leaves nothing to be desired. Its plan has been carefully evolved to meet every requirement in point of comfort, convenience and adaptability of an up-to-date art school. Every part of it is abundantly lighted, and the heating and ventilating systems are as nearly perfect as modern science and experience can make them. Here are accommodated the entire day school, the free-hand division of the night school and a picture gallery which should delight all art lovers in Baltimore. Plans are made for the equipment of rooms with all the necessary appliances for the arts and crafts—metal and leaded glass working, enameling, mosaic, pottery, decorated leather and weaving.

With this building and that on Center Market for the night school work of industrial drawing the Maryland Institute is once more equipped to carry forward its magnificent work.

MARYLAND
INSTITUTE

PELL AND CORBETT
ARCHITECTS

Petaline Embroidery

PEONY DECORATION

PETALINE EMBROIDERY

PETALINE EMBROIDERY BY BESSIE BERRY GRABOWSKII

AMONG the many new needleworks finding their way to this country petaline is achieving a remarkable popularity, considering its recent arrival. This embroidery came to us first from Yokohama and was executed principally by men. Its adaptability to all decorative purposes where needlework may be employed was immediately recognized and appreciated. The work has a marvelous naturalistic appearance, the unique element of which is that each part of a form or flower not only appears to be separate and stand alone, but actually does. It is a wonderful achievement in needlework and yet one that may readily be attempted, with rich results and most pleasing, by any who are accustomed to fine embroidery.

That lovers of high-grade needlework may not fear to experiment I shall lay particular emphasis on the technical practice of the craft, showing not only the completed work but each "step" in its execution. This needlework may be adapted to both wearing apparel and household decoration, to washable and unwashable materials. It may be executed in two manners to suit these exigencies.

I have mentioned the petals of a flower standing separate from the background, and that is the chief feature of the work. In the original method this is achieved by the use of a fine non-rusting, very malleable wire, which is couched finely (using a thread of the white or colored silk employed for the blossom) around the extreme outer edge of the petals. This, of course, is completely covered with the "filling" embroidery.

XXX

Petaline Embroidery

PETALINE, FIG. 1

Petaline designs are constructed differently from the usual designs of needlework. There are virtually two sets. The construction of the design, that is, the grouping of the sprays, should be placed first as for the regular shaded embroidery, all but the inner or double petals to a flower (and where a blossom, like the iris, is a single-leaved blossom nothing of it is stamped but the center). These petals and leaves are stamped separately, on extra cloth, and only their location on the main design designated.

Placing the article to be embroidered in the frame, the body of the design is executed in the usual manner of blended embroidery; and whether in silks or cottons, all white or colors, the same stitch, the "Apus plumonium," or blended feather stitch, is employed, embroidering leaves and stems and all back petals (if any) flat on the fabric. This is but the background or "setting" to the real work.

The loose petals are embroidered on wire frames (see figure 1); holding firmly in place with the left hand, couch evenly all around the petals or leaves. Now, using the same silk or thread, and if very fine a double strand, buttonhole closely around this, using the short and long buttonhole stitch,

IRIS DECORATION

PETALINE EMBROIDERY

Miss Hergesheimer

PETALINE, FIG. 2

hole edge is scarcely discernible in the work.

Row after row follows, in all white, or shaded, as may be desired, until the entire petal is filled, except for a few remaining stitches; then the petals are carefully cut out and applied to the main design, where designated, and are held firmly in place by the heavy fluffy centers of the blossoms. These petals, stiffened by the wire, may be crinkled and turned to any position desired.

The wire may be dispensed with if desired, while all other characteristic features of petaline embroidery are retained. But even in washable articles there is no real disadvantage in the wire, which is readily flattened, non-rusting, and though ironed flat is readily moulded into shape again. Of course, much of the character of petaline depends upon the use of the wire.

A word as to motif and coloring in the specimens reproduced. In the screen design the same scheme is carried out to entirely different effect. The screen has a background of pearl-colored "faillé" and the iris are embroidered in amethyst shades, from reds to gray; the pollen a downy yellow, and the leaves silver green. The worker has inserted little tufts of cotton under the bowls of the petals to and keeping the proper stitch direction, so that the next line of stitches may blend well with them. (See figures 2 and 3.) This second row of stitches should run so well with the first that the button-raise them higher. In the peony design the centers are padded high and the inner petals cupped over it in a most realistic manner. This is executed on fine white linen in a hemstitched circle. The peonies are in creamy pink silk, while the leaves are in delicate greens.

PETALINE, FIG. 3

Such motifs are readily applied to costumes, both in silks and linen, and the results will rival any flat embroidery that could be employed. Excellent effects can be had on heavy linen worked in the lustrous cottons now popular with needleworkers. But in the richness and natural beauty of petaline embroidery nothing brings out its true character so well as silks on silk.

THE Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts announces the following prize awards: The Temple Gold Medal to Frederick P. Vinton for his portrait of Carroll D. Wright, president Clark College. The Walter Lippincott Prize for the best figure picture in the exhibition to Thomas P. Anshutz for his canvas entitled The Tanagra. The Jennie Sesnan Gold Medal for the best landscape in the exhibition to Theodore Wendel for his canvas entitled Winter at Ipswich. The Carroll H. Beck Memorial Gold Medal, now awarded for the first time, for the best portrait in the exhibition to John S. Sargent for his portrait of Miss Mathilde Townsend, of Washington. The Mary Smith prize of $100 to Miss Martha Walter for her Portrait. The exhibition in all comprises 447 pictures and 180 pieces of sculpture and represents the pick of over 2,500 offered works. The exhibition remains open until March 14.

SOME PORTRAITS BY ELLA S. HERGESHEIMER BY VINCENT BURTON

MISS HERGESHEIMER has fulfilled the promise made five years ago when she was awarded the scholarship for European study and travel at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, Philadelphia. A student in that Academy four years she won the prizes offered by the Academy Schools in perspective, landscape, anatomy, figure and animal painting, having previously been a student for two years in the Philadelphia School of Design. Added interest is attached to her work by the fact that she is the great-great granddaughter of Charles Wilson Peale, one of the founders of the Academy. Working as she has for four years under the inspiration of two such masters as William M. Chase and Cecelia Beaux her work is technically strong and truthful, and beneath and beyond the

Miss Hergesheimer

PORTRAIT OF MRS. GEORGE WASHINGTON AND SON

BY MISS
HERGESHEIMER

mere technical skill lies her own personality, the subtle charm of a nature singularly sound and sweet. Studying in the galleries of Europe for three years she found her greatest inspiration in the paintings of Velazquez in the Prado. After exhibiting for several years in the Paris Salon she has returned to America, where her work in the exhibitions here has received favorable comment.

The art interest in the South has received a decided impetus in the last year by her presence in Nashville, Tenn., where she went to paint the portrait of Bishop McTyeire for the Vanderbilt University, to replace the one lost by fire. This older portrait had been presented to the University by Mrs. Commodore Vanderbilt to commemorate the fact that it was the friendship of the Commodore for Bishop McTyeire that led him to make the munificent gift which made the university possible. So satisfactory was her picture to the Vanderbilt University that they immediately commissioned her to do two more portraits, and she is now painting one of Mrs. McTyeire, a companion to that of her distinguished husband. The execution of her commissions in Nashville has been a series of triumphs for the young artist and the enthusiasm over her work has been of benefit to the appreciation of art in general in the South.

Her portrait of Mrs. George Washington and her son is one of her important canvases and is handled with a dignity and sincerity that commands the utmost confidence in the artist. The subject is one of the most beautiful young matrons in Tennessee, who comes of a long line of beautiful women. Miss Hergesheimer has painted the mother and child with rare sympathy and poetic interpretation. The portrait of Mrs. Mathew McClung Gardner, painted in a rose satin gown, which her great aunt, Mrs. James K. Polk, wore when she was mistress of the White House, again gives the artist an opportunity to portray Southern womanhood in one of its most beautiful phases. With equal strength she has portrayed character in the portraits of Mrs. Nitia Gordon White, Mrs. Martha Malone Hobson and Mr. Joseph Daviess Hamilton. Having won an enviable place in the group of young American painters of the present day it is with the deepest interest and confidence that the future development of her work will be followed.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. MATHEW
M'CLUNG GARDNER

BY MISS
HERGESHEIMER

XXXIII

Hugh H. Breckenridge

THE NAUTILUS

BY HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE

HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE BY ARTHUR HOEBER

It is not every artist who is endowed with a sense of the pictorial, for though the call to paint is often very strong and unmistakable not every one among the craftsmen is gifted with a nice feeling for composition. Yet a good composition not infrequently carries indifferent color and excellent drawing makes amends for other shortcomings. Where all these are combined they make for good art, and Mr. Breckenridge is unusually gifted, being various also, for he attacks the figure as well as the landscape, achieving a creditable result in both directions. Mr. Breckenridge was born in the village of Leesburg, in northern Virginia. With never a picture to be seen, with no associates of any particular artistic leaning and nothing to inspire him toward the artistic career the boy, nevertheless, found himself drawing all the time, painting in his groping way, and yearning for a career of which he knew nothing, save that it would bring him to the nature which he loved and would satisfy his desires to create. And so, in the course of time, he went to Philadelphia, where he entered the art school, and I am satisfied there must be something in the atmosphere of that maligned city that gives artistic energy, for the Academy there has a long and honorable record of students sent out well equipped into the world who have made a name and reflected credit on their alma mater.

The academic study in his case did not stifle the artistic purposes, rather strengthened them, and the man came forth equipped for his profession. To-day he is curator of the institution and one of its valued instructors. After his work at the academy Mr. Breckenridge went to Paris—that

BLACK-EYED SUSANS

BY HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE

THE HOMESTEAD

BY HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE

Hugh H. Breckenridge

Mecca of Americans—where he imbibed much of the good, and with pastel or oil he is a distinctly clever manipulator of his medium. Indeed, I am not sure that at times his dexterity does not run away with him. Facility is a good servant but a dangerous master. A recent exhibition of the man's work at the New York galleries of Fishel, Adler & Schwartz, on Fifth Avenue, introduced him to the New York public, at least that portion that does not follow carefully the official shows at our own Academy. There were two score, perhaps, of landscapes and the figure in both mediums, for the main charming transcripts of bright color, of entertaining scenes, with feeling and poetry, pictures both artistic and entertaining, and it was evident the artist was to be taken most seriously.

Particular attention Mr. Breckenridge had paid to a shape of the warm light of the late afternoon when a golden glow is over everything, and this he represents with remarkable fidelity, with a nice sense of the time and the place. Strong contrasts of light and shade, however, hold this artist. In a figure he calls Nautilus there is a woman seated, holding in her hand a shell. She is in a reverie and the play of light is most unusual, with considerable brilliancy.

I should hardly call Mr. Breckenridge a subtle colorist, yet he obtains most agreeable pigment with delicacy and feeling, and there is a distinction, nevertheless, to all he does in the matter of tone. He knows his nature, his tree forms, and for flowers and the wild growth he has a decided leaning. The autumn time appeals to him most, perhaps, though he paints the winter with much of the sentiment of the cold and dreariness and always, as I have indicated, he has something of decided artistic interest to convey, telling his story well. Occasionally he ventures into the domain of portraiture. A large pastel portrait last season received a gold medal at the Philadelphia Art Club, and shown later at the New York Water Color Club attracted attention. Invariably is he a competent workman who knows his metier well. I am not by any means sure that the man has yet found himself, for, with his facility, he is inclined to experiment in many a technical direction, and it is fair to presume the future has much in store for him.

SUMMER

BY HUGH H. BRECKENRIDGE

The International Studio

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

PLATES

IGNACIO ZULOAGA

MILE. BREAL IN CARMEN
See page xxviii

ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

ROSEHEARTY
See page 88

ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

YASAKA PAGODA, KYOTO, JAPAN
See page 97

HENRY HOLIDAY

THE LAST SUPPER
See page 107

HENRY HOLIDAY

A STUDY IN DRAPERY
See page 113

L. J. WOOD, R.I.

ABBEVILLE, NORMANDY
See page 144

L. J. WOOD, R.I.

ABBEVILLE, NORMANDY
See page 145

LUCIEN MONOD

A LITHOGRAPH
See page 155

CONTENTS, APRIL, 1909

| | PAGE |
|---|-------|
| ZULOAGA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY..... By Christian Brinton..... | xxxix |
| Seven Illustrations | |
| ROBERT W. ALLAN'S RECENT PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS..... | 89 |
| Twelve Illustrations. By T. Martin Wood..... | |
| SOME NEW SCULPTURE..... By Alfred Drury, A.R.A.... | 100 |
| Thirteen Illustrations. | |
| THE DECORATIVE WORK OF MR. HENRY HOLIDAY..... | 106 |
| Eight Illustrations. | |
| CHINESE PICTURES IN BERLIN..... By Jarno Jessen..... | 116 |
| Nine Illustrations. | |
| ARCHITECTURAL GARDENING—IV. | 120 |
| With Nine Illustrations after Designs by C. E. MALLOWS and F. L. GRIGGS. | |
| THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY'S NINTH EXHIBITION..... | 128 |
| Eight Illustrations. | |
| THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY'S ANNUAL EXHIBITION..... | 134 |
| Five Illustrations. By A. Eddington..... | |
| STUDIO TALK (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS) | 151 |
| Thirty-three Illustrations. | |
| ART SCHOOL NOTES—LONDON..... | 167 |
| One Illustration. | |
| REVIEWS AND NOTICES..... | 169 |
| THE LAY FIGURE: ON GREAT EXPECTATIONS..... | 172 |
| A PLEA FOR THE OPEN FIREPLACE. NATIONAL SOCIETY OF HOME ART AND DECORATION..... | xlvii |
| Three Illustrations. | |
| PORCELAIN MADE IN AMERICA | xlix |
| Five Illustrations. By Arthur V. Rose..... | |
| AMONG THE SCHOOLS..... | lii |
| Four Illustrations. | |
| IN THE GALLERIES..... By Harold Bentley..... | lv |
| Seven Illustrations. | |
| PORTRAITS AT THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM By Elisabeth Luther Cary .. | lix |
| Eight Illustrations. | |

Schools

Any additional information concerning art study and tuition, as well as circulars and advice, will be cheerfully furnished, free of charge, by this department. Address SCHOOL DEPARTMENT, The International Studio, 110-114 W. 32d St., N. Y.

SPECIAL SUMMER CLASSES

The Alexander Robinson School

ESTABLISHED 1900

Painting Tours in Belgium, Holland, Italy and Spain. Intended mainly for those taking up painting professionally

Methods from the sketch to the completed work as applied to Landscape, Street Scenes, Markets, Costume Figures, Interiors, etc.

Specialty: MODERN WATER COLOR in all its branches; Oil, Pastel, Black and White, Composition (a feature of the school)

Spring class for 3 Months
April, May, June, at

VENICE

and Italian Lakes

Summer Classes: 3 Months, July, August, September

BELGIUM AND HOLLAND

Mr. ROBINSON is a yearly Exhibitor in many important shows (Salon Paris, etc.). His pictures are in permanent collections—Museum Ixelles, Bruxelles, Moscow; in many noted collections in America, England and France

Member of The American Water-Color Society; New York Water-Color Club; Société Internationale Aquasclistes, Paris; Société Internationale Arts and Lettres, Paris; Royal Belgian Society; "Labour" Art Society, Brussels; Honorable Member Circle Artistique of Bruges and of Tournai.

These are practical sketching-tours with minimum of cost, students deriving great benefit. Application should be immediately made for this season's classes (often received too late for accommodation). Information of the manager of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO, 110 West 32d St., New York. Entries to the Boston Bureau, 22 Aldworth St. European headquarters, care of the English Bank, Bruges, Belgium.

Cape Cod School of Art

SEASON:

JUNE 1st TO OCTOBER 1st, 1909

For information apply to

CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

Care of The International Studio

114 West 32d Street

NEW YORK.

SUMMER ART CLASS IN FRANCE

NEAR PARIS (ETAPLES)

INSTRUCTOR, EUGENE PAUL ULLMAN

Route: FRANCE, GERMANY, HOLLAND and BELGIUM OF FRANCE, SWITZERLAND and ITALY

ART TOUR

for seeing and studying the Best Art of Europe, visiting FRANCE, BELGIUM, HOLLAND, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND and ITALY

Under DOUGLAS JOHN CONNAH

Membership of both parties limited.

Rates from $375.00

FRANK VAN VLEET TOMPKINS, DIRECTOR The Alpine, Broadway and Thirty-third St., New York

ART COLONY

at Boothbay Harbor, on the COAST-OF-MAINE. Twelve Instructors.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET FREE

Asa G. Randall, Providence, R. I.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF PAINTING

VINEYARD HAVEN, MASS.

(Island of Martha's Vineyard)

CONDUCTED BY

ARTHUR R. FREEDLANDER

FIFTH SEASON—June 20-Sept. 20

Outdoor Classes: Landscape, marine, figure—with three criticisms per week. Special course for students of Architecture: To develop facility in the handling of water color.

For prospectus address

A. R. FREEDLANDER, 80 West 40th St., N. Y.

BYRDCLIFFE

Metal work will be taught by Mr. Hazenplug of Hull House and Chicago University.

There will be classes for children in nature study, gymnastics, dancing.

Cottages can be rented for the summer.

The boarding house will be open from July 1 to September 15.

For further information apply to E. M. Walker, Byrdcliffe, Woodstock, Ulster County, N. Y.

For further information on Summer Courses, see pages XLIX to LII Rear Section Editorial Pages of this issue

AMONG THE SCHOOLS—PLANS FOR THE SUMMER SEASON

THE Summer School of the Art Academy of Cincinnati will open on the 14th of June continuing to the 21st of August. The outdoor work will become a much more important feature this year under Miss Grace Young, who works freely both in oil and water colors. There will be as usual classes working in the studio from cast and life. In addition there will be classes in modeling and in applied art, including metal work, ceramics and wood carving. The location of the academy in Eden Park, some three hundred feet above the city level, secures agreeable surroundings.

HAND-BUILT POTTERY
CHICAGO ART INSTITUTE SCHOOL

THE interesting sketch reproduced from the work of one of the students of Miss Palmie's class last year at Point Pleasant, N. J., gives a suggestion of the region and its resources for artistic treatment. Point Pleasant is located sixty miles south of New York City, on the Jersey coast, the excursion fare being $2.05 from New York and return. It has unusual advantages for the artist, it being similar in character in its picturesque beauty to the northern coast of France and Holland. The Manasquan River, the ocean, sand dunes, cedars, pines, give a large variety of motives for sketching-material, as well as for pictures, to the student.

SKETCH—MISS PALMIE'S SUMMER CLASS
POINT PLEASANT, N. J.

AMONG the Boyd Tours, which include in their number the Snell Art School, in Holland, elsewhere mentioned, are a number of tours especially interesting to art students, such as the tour through Central Europe, including points in England, The Hague, Amsterdam, Cologne, Munich, Venice, Milan and Paris.

A FIFTY-DAYS' visit to Greece is arranged by the Bureau of University Travel,

Copyright, 1909, by Hispanic Society of America

"MLLE. LUCIENNE BRÉVAL IN CARMEN"
FROM AN OIL PAINTING BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOLUME XXVII, No. 146

1. The first group of people who are interested in the study of the history of the United States are the people who are interested in the history of the United States.

ZULOGA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY
BY CHRISTIAN BRINTON

Nowhere is the principle of individualism in art asserting itself with more vigor or in the face of more formidable obstacles than in painting. There was a time, and that time is not so distant, when every Spanish painter of consequence came to Rome or Paris for inspiration and guidance. They lived abroad for protracted periods or home and all, shamelessly debased and corrupted by an priceless esthetic patrimony. Yet matters are rapidly changing in this respect. There has lately been a wholesome return to the past, as well as a step forward into the future. After years of indifference and neglect it is at last being recognized by certain robust yet sensitive spirits that Spain herself offers richer and more inexhaustible material than can ever be found in foreign lands, and that the splendid tradition of El Greco, Velázquez and Goya is incomparably superior to the faint glimmer of Fortuny or the pathetic plagiarisms of Casado del Alisal. The younger handful of pioneers has had a hard, unblinking fight against the combined ascendancy of academic authority and complacent prejudice. Still, they have never flinched, and, while their victory is by no means complete, it is well within reach.

Divided as the country is into separate provinces, each with its sharply marked racial linguistic and climatic characteristics, it has hence not been difficult, once the initial impetus was received, for the Peninsula proper to display a healthy independence of attitude. It was naturally not in Madrid under the shadow of the San Fernando Academy that art renewed and refreshed itself at the fountain head of reality, but rather in such cities as Barcelona, Valencia and Bilbao. The Catalans, with their unfailing initiative, were the first to shake off the yoke of precedent and strike out for themselves, Rusiñol, Casas, Fontcuberta, Barrau and Pichot being among

Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of dental caries between children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and those who had not. A total of 600 children from two public schools in a low socioeconomic area of a large city in Brazil were examined by dentists. The prevalence of dental caries was determined according to WHO criteria. The results showed that the prevalence of dental caries was higher among children who had not received fluoride varnish than among those who had received it. This result suggests that fluoride varnish can reduce the prevalence of dental caries in children.

that it was
As
By
The
the
the
At
The
For re for
M
B ch fin on E 20 pro
Es to a v
the infl

When asked how he scored points for his emphasis, starting with the matter of the importance of money, he said that he thought he scored right by stating he was convinced, apparently. That such the artist's may be to move unquestionably to the measure of money.

Digitized by Google

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOL. XXXVII. No. 146

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

APRIL, 1909

ZULOAGA AT THE HISPANIC SOCIETY BY CHRISTIAN BRINTON

NOWHERE is the principle of nationalism in art asserting itself with more vigor or in the face of more formidable obstacles than in present-day Spain. There was a time, and that time is not so long since, when every Spanish painter of note turned either to Rome or Paris for inspiration and guidance. They lived abroad for protracted periods and, one and all, shamelessly debased and diluted their own priceless esthetic patrimony. Yet matters are rapidly changing in this respect. There has lately been a wholesome return to the past, as well as a step forward into the future. After years of indifference and neglect it is at last being recognized by certain robust yet sensitive spirits that Spain herself offers richer and more congenial material than can ever be found in foreign lands, and that the splendid tradition of El Greco, Velázquez and Goya is incomparably superior to the dainty glitter of Fortuny or the theatric pagantry of Pradilla and Casado del Alisal. This slender handful of pioneers has had a hard, uphill fight against the combined ascendancy of academic authority and complacent prejudice. Still, they have never flinched, and, while their victory is by no means complete, it is well within reach.

Divided as the country is into separate provinces, each with sharply marked racial linguistic and climatic characteristics, it has hence not been difficult, once the initial impetus was received, for the Peninsular painter to display a healthy independence of attitude. It was naturally not in Madrid under the shadow of the San Fernando Academy that art revived and refreshed itself at the fountain head of reality, but rather in such cities as Barcelona, Valencia and Bilbao. The Catalans, with their unflinching initiative, were the first to shake off the yoke of precedent and strike out for themselves, Rusiñol, Casas, Fontdevila, Barrau and Pichot being among the earliest champions of the modern movement. Yet if Barcelona excels in having fostered a notably strong group of painters, to Valencia belongs the honor of having produced a single personality who, in most respects, surpasses their combined efforts, and it is no longer necessary to remind the American public that his name is Joaquín Sorolla y Bastida. While it is true that Sorolla occupies an almost isolated position in his native province, such is not, however, the case with Ignacio Zuloaga, about whom have rallied in the north numerous vigorous and positive talents whose very existence is thus far unknown to the outside world. The Basques are notoriously proud, reserved and self-reliant and, just as the Catalans have made Barcelona their artistic focal point, so these energetic Montañeses are logically centering their efforts at Bilbao. This teeming little capital, which, in view of its growing esthetic as well as commercial importance may be called the Glasgow of Spain, is the scene of regular exhibitions which for individuality of vision and treatment have no parallel anywhere in Spain. Zuloaga, Losada, Iturrino, Uranga, Regoyos and Guirad are the names which figure most prominently on the walls of the Escuelas de Albia. Exulting in their new-found strength they are clanish to a degree almost unbelievable. They make a veritable fetich of nationality. In many ways they recall the Boys of Glasgow, and, possibly, their influence may prove correspondingly great.

While the Basque press and public and the occasional pilgrim from Paris or even farther hail with enthusiasm this Nueva pintura española it is not, as a matter of fact, so very new. It is rather a revival on modern lines of the great basic traditions of all art that is truly Spanish, and at the head of this group rightfully stands Ignacio Zuloaga, the most convinced apostle of the past among them all. Though the artistic hegemony of this sturdy coterie may to-morrow pass to Manuel Losada it to-day unquestionably belongs to Zuloaga, who in large measure epitomizes the aims and ambitions of the entire circle. The art of Zuloaga is substantially unknown to America. Visitors to the Salons are familiar with his work, but beyond one or two scattered canvases nothing had crossed the seas to our shores until the last few weeks. It is, therefore, with a distinct feeling of gratitude to the Hispanic Society in general, and to Mr. Archer M. Huntington in particular, that one welcomes the present display, which so appropriately supplements that recently devoted to the superb graphic optimism of Señor Sorolla.

XXXIX

Zuloaga at the Hispanic Society

The position which Ignacio Zuloaga occupies in the category of modern painting is well-nigh unique. Praised without discrimination abroad and treated with ill-concealed enmity at home he has gone his way indifferent alike to eulogy and to criticism. That imperious independence of spirit which sustained him through years of struggle and obscurity seems in no danger of deserting him now that success has come in such ample measure. Despite the immense vogue which he at present enjoys both he and his work have remained, and always will remain, fundamentally unchanged. There is, after all, but one way to arrive at an accurate understanding of this art which is at once so individual, so traditional and so full of impulsive passion and esthetic poise, and that is by considering Zuloaga in the light of his ancestry and personal experiences. He is beyond all else a Basque, a product of that ancient and defiant race living on the southern slopes of the Pyrenees, whose social and industrial development is to-day keeping pace with that of her progressive neighbors along the Catalan coast. The son of a family who have for generations devoted their energies to craftsmanship of the highest order, Zuloaga, who was born at Eibar, in the province of Guipúzcoa, on July 26, 1870, was compelled to win his position in the world of art by the sheer force of talent and volition. His father wished him to become an architect, but Ignacio refused, and little by little fought his way to the front against incredible obstacles. He found no generous and sympathetic patrons, such as the youthful Sorolla did in Don Antonio García and later in Don Pedro Gil. All was opposition or open hostility. He was obliged at intervals to renounce art altogether, becoming by turns a bookkeeper, a dealer in antiques and, finally, a professional bull fighter. He familiarized himself with life in every quarter of Spain, mingling now with torero and gitano, now with muleteers in the rugged sierras, and even witches and smugglers.

It is this vivid and picturesque existence, combined as it was with an unquenchable thirst for all that was old and rich in racial flavor, that formed the foundation of Zuloaga's art. He sought everywhere and at all times those native types which to-day give his work such a powerful and decisive appeal. He accomplished nothing of importance either in Rome or in Paris. It was only when he definitely returned to his own country that his art achieved its final accent. Then, and then alone, came those masterpieces of observation and effective composition which quickly carried his name from capital to capital. It is, indeed, difficult to point to anything in the entire range of modern painting comparable to those fluent and pictorial canvases upon which his early reputation was founded. That this young Basque should successively have taken Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Düsseldorf and a dozen other cities by storm is small wonder, nor is it to be marveled at that New York should to-day show such gratifying interest in the splendid pictures now on view at the Hispanic Society.

While this art unmistakably bears the stamp of its race and time Zuloaga is by no means a spontaneous or even voluntary realist. He does not copy, he creates, and hence the continuous vitality of his appeal. It is not a quick flash of fact that he gives us but something which is at once a record and a symbol. He chooses his models and arranges his compositions with obvious deliberation. His method is the precise contrary of Sorolla's, and nothing could be farther apart than the final result. In his great, dim studio in the nave of the abandoned church of San Juan de los Caballeros in Segovia, or in the near-by Canongía, this young man with a spirit so old redreams the dreams of bygone Spain, nor is it difficult for him to find in his wanderings about this magic land types which fit his preordained vision. This is in truth La España Negra. These canvases throng with picturesque dwarfs and Gipsies, itinerant venders, somber and shabby hermits, bull-fighters full of antique grace of movement and hideous hags who might have stepped out of Goya's Caprichos. You meet in this art memories of Velázquez and Murillo as well as Goya, but everywhere you will be confronted with a subdued though resonant sense of color and a supple strength of draughtsmanship which belong alone to the painter of Eibar.

Such is Zuloaga's kingdom. He is manifestly happier when depicting actual Spanish types than when portraying those more sophisticated products of boulevard or café chantant which have lately engaged his attention. At its best this art is fundamentally racial and Spanish. The vintners of La Rioja, the village bard or magistrate and the sorcer-

Zuloaga at the Hispanic Society

STREET IN HARO

BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

esses of San Millán far outvalue for him the inconsequential divinities who throng the heights of Montmartre. He has read the soul of Spain as have none save her very greatest interpreters, and the soul of Paris must ever seem to him less significant. This eloquent and masterful painter seems for the moment to be hesitating between an unconvincing continentalism and a deep and fecund native inspiration. He cannot too soon return to his early haunts, nor too quickly reaffirm that principle of esthetic nationalism which he elsewhere so invincibly upholds.

VINTNERS RETURNING HOME
BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

SORCERESSES OF SAN MILLÁN
BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

WOMEN ON BALCONY
BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

PAULETTE DANCING
BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

THE PILGRIM
BY IGNACIO ZULOAGA

"ROSEHEARTY." FROM THE WATER-COLOUR
BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

ROBERT W. ALLAN'S RECENT
PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS
BY T. MARTIN WOOD

NAVALISM in art often stops short at the merely photographic ideal, and though the painter has the advantage of the photographer in freedom and command of colour, these advantages do not count if they leave us, just where a photograph leaves us, facing every subject in nature simply as a view—leave us without the power to enter into communication with nature through the picture. To pass, for instance, in a sea piece into that sense of the salt sea atmosphere to which we proceed through such an art as Mr. Allan's.

How shall we ever know what is the nature of this element of truer realism which renders that which is felt as well as that which is seen? In such art, one of our five senses, the sense of sight, seems to refer us to some centre where the impressions of our other senses have mingled—the sound of the waves with the scent and the colour of the sea. We feel a sense of reality before a picture, not by the cleverness of its imitation of the surface of outer things, so much as by its subtle suggestion of the invisible elements of the scene: and it is perhaps the

to the with the world of seen, and we have of the
Mr. Allan leaves us the sense
of the scent of the the sea
the sense
ing, and
of the
What of space perfectly centre of said, the has not what is good, and
and the
of the sea

ROBERT W. ALLAN'S RECENT
PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS.
BY T. MARTIN WOOD.

NATURALISM in art often stops short at the merely photographic ideal, and though the painter has the advantage of the photographer in freedom and command of colour, these advantages do not count if they leave us, just where a photograph leaves us, facing every subject in nature simply as a view—leave us without the power to enter into communication with nature through the picture; to pass, for instance, in a sea-piece into that sense of the salt sea atmosphere to which we proceed through such an art as Mr. Allan's.

How shall we ever know what is the nature of this element of truer realism which renders that which is felt as well as that which is seen? In such art, one of our five senses, the sense of sight, seems to refer us to some centre where the impressions of our other senses have mingled—the sound of the waves with the scent and the colour of the sea. We feel a sense of reality before a picture, not by the cleverness of its imitation of the surface of outer things, so much as by its subtle suggestion of the invisible elements of the scene; and it is perhaps because the arts have to make their appeal to inward experience that such a phrase as "art for art's sake" cannot be interpreted in the sense in which it was coined. Carried away by a mood, some painters lose touch with reality altogether; we can only follow them if temperamentally we are of their tribe.

Mr Allan remains a close naturalist and never leaves the actual, and yet his pictures do not just bring us before a scene and leave us there. We do feel in them the source of their inspiration, the character of the weather when they were painted, the grey day, the bright sun sparkling on the sea, the gulls flying—and I was going to write screaming, but this would be quite beyond the province of painting, one would say. Well, is it? That is what one asks oneself. Perhaps we cannot respond to a picture, except to praise its scholastic perfections, unless its message reaches the inmost centres of our consciousness, in which, as we have said, the experiences of all our senses meet. And has not perfection of craft its secret in this? By what other than by an inner measure can we tell good craft from bad? Does colour in a landscape appeal to us unless it has the particular fragrance of truth—the colour of the day on which the scene

"THE INCOMING TIDE" (OIL)

XXXVII. No. 146.—APRIL, 1909

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

"ARRIVING HOME" (OIL)

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

was painted? For this atmospheric colour-truth is truth to the mood of the moment and the hour.

Hence our delight in such craft as Mr. Allan's has its origin at the source of our delight in nature, for art and nature are so inextricably bound together as sources of pleasurable emotion that we appraise what has been done in art by this constant, almost sub-conscious reference to our love of nature.

Few landscape painters of to-day have kept so close a hold of the purely objective side of their subjects as Mr. Allan, and at the same time painted so subjectively. His pictures are at all times the interpretation, not merely of a scene, but of the particular nature of his regard for that scene at the moment. Mr. Allan appeals to me personally as a sea painter, but he is far from being that only; and to others he may appeal more forcibly by his landscapes. He certainly is alive to impressive inland scenes. The picture Evening, which we reproduce (page 95), interprets the hour with feeling. A constant variety of subjects is chosen in this art, for the painter's vision is alert and has not become enslaved to one kind of scene only, nor his heart to only one kind of mood.

This variety of subject and inspiration makes one feel, as do so many other things about this work, the virility of Mr. Allan's artistic nature, its energy and confidence. His record as a water-colourist is great enough for a painter known only as a water-colourist; it is, as it were, a second reputation which has grown up side by side with his reputation as an oil painter. And in water-colour his position is unique. Vice-President of the old Water-colour Society, it is difficult to think who could hold the post with greater fitness. For he is a pure water-colourist, a lover of the medium of the water as well as the colour which gives the character to this medium. Whilst water-colour painting in England suffered a temporary though not a short eclipse; whilst certain societies exhibited for years works which, though termed water-colours, might as well have been executed in any other medium for all that they expressed the charm of water-colour, Mr. Allan sustained its true tradition, which is to see colour carried over the paper in a vehicle of water, strong or merely stained, as desired, but always pre-eminently expressing the artist's pleasure in controlling this floating, accidental and delicate means of attaining an effect.

During all the dark time of eclipse, Mr. Allan went on painting in water-colours in a way that was derived from its first and natural use. The painter Melville, after he had seen some of Mr. Allan's work, painted as one who had received a revelation, and thereafter himself built up a method of his own remarkable for its strength, its freedom, and its luscious execution. This should be remembered by those who do not know the history of water-colour in the last generation and who have thought that such a method as Mr. Allan's had its inception at the easel of Melville. Mr. Robert Allan's is only one of a hundred ways of painting in water-colour, but it is one of the true and not one of the perverted ways. The painter's delight is in translating nature through this sense of water and colour mixed, and he does not stipple and labour to overcome all that is most characteristic of the effect of tinted water. One always thinks of water-colour as an evasive art, as it was indeed regarded by Whistler, perhaps its greatest master, though others have conducted it to orchestral effects, attained within the limits which a quite natural use of the medium must impose.

"A GATE OF THE SEA." FROM THE OIL
PAINTING BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

Robert W. Allan, R.W.S.

Mr. Allan's art in water-colour is robust too, straightforward like his oil paintings, not given to over-much subtlety, aiming at a direct and confident statement of the effect which he has seen. This quality of directness, which at its best, would always seem to go with a method equivalently spontaneous, has both in oil and water-colour found very happy expression in the pictures this painter has made in Japan. For Japan, if we are to believe those European artists who have painted there, and the Japanese artists themselves, stimulates a direct method, an art on the wing, expressing the pleasure in chance effects which the Japanese have and which they always themselves aim at in painting, as they aim at it in the arrangement of their gardens, their flowers, and in their decorations and designs. Far different in character and in feeling as are these Japanese scenes from such subjects as the English fishing boats returning to harbour, and different as the frame of mind must have been in which they were carried out, the painter's hand as it were takes us from one place to the other with him, and we note the modifications the different scenes impose upon an art which is always his own, a fresh, breezy, manly art, that seems at one with the subjects of the fishing ports, and which, in the Japanese work, seems to represent so characteristically an Englishman's visit to Japan.

Perhaps the ordinary English person comes more intimately into touch with the spirit of Japan and its people in this way, through the medium of the art of a compatriot of his own, than through study at original sources. Only experts know what the Japan of the Japanese is, but every-

"OVER THE SUNLIT SEA" (OIL)

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

"MONTROSE." FROM THE OIL PAINTING
BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

Robert W. Allan, R.W.S.

one knows what Japan counts for in the European imagination, and it is that Japan, the visitor's Japan, that Mr. Allan gives us. The character of the Japanese, before they came under later European influences, was of course to be understood by the study of their own art. The European painter is attracted to scenes out there which represent the old Japan, and one of the most interesting things in modern art has been this interpretation of Eastern life which has once expressed itself with its own form of realism and through its own conventions over again in Western art. It has made that country seem all the more strange, this presenting over again in a realism of our own scenes which we had viewed before in Japanese symbols. A colourist is perhaps the last man in the world who looks for colour, because he finds it everywhere. And yet colour effects strange and new must always stir him, and the modern colourists have gone to Japan in search of this sensation. Mr. Allan's art is matter-of-fact, and to the European, Japan, as he conceives it, still seems a fairy kingdom. What will a matter-of-fact art make of fairyland? It will show how real it is, that there is still this bizarre quarter of the world to give to art which seeks only facts its charming inspiration of fancy.

One characteristic in Mr. Allan's art has not been touched upon, namely the fulness of his compositions. This is especially to be noticed in such a painting as Over the Sunlit Sea. Here the boats and the distant coast line and the people and birds on the shore provide many very different problems, and Mr. Allan's canvas embraces the scene with a simplicity of treatment that shows a great certainty in grasping the essentials of many different forms. The bearing and movement of all the figures are suggested well. This comprehensive outlook would almost persuade us that a painter who can draw at all can draw anything—for here we have the character of all kinds of different things rendered with care. Yet there are many painters, even masters in their own line, who, having mastered coast scenery, would have but a faltering touch in painting the figure, or who, having the power to express human action, miss that intimate knowledge of shipping craft which would make their rendering of fishing boats convincing.

How intimate Mr. Allan's knowledge of shipping craft is, we do not know. Is it some extraordinarily clear perception of the characteristics of various forms that enables his brush to touch almost any subject in a convincing way—or does he know all about ships as well as being a learned figure and animal painter? Some artists are figure painters.

"HOME FROM THE FISHING" (OIL)

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

"EVENING." FROM THE OIL PAINTING
BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

"TATEJAMA, JAPAN" (OIL)

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

others animal painters or sea painters, as the case may be, but Mr. Allan is that most distinguished of all, simply a painter, one to whom vision and handling go together, who walks about the world not as a specialist but as a gifted man interested in everything and with sufficient power to express everything. If he then seems able to express everything that appeals to him, his limitations will not be found in lack of variety in his intentions. If he has limitations, as every artist has, they will not take the form of constant inability to face certain kinds of subjects, or lack of artistic interest in more than half the things in the world. Has an artist that interest in his subject, apart from the outward spectacle it affords, which some modern æsthetes would deny him? Mr. Allan would, I think, scarcely return so often to seaport subjects if his interests went no deeper. Other scenes untouched by his brush have beauty as distinctly. He has a wide range, but it will be found with him, as we think with every artist, that only those scenes which interest him as a man will stimulate his palette as an artist.

In an appreciation of the success to which a painter has attained, it is necessary perhaps to try to define at what point his work reaches its limitations. There are two kinds of defects in art, and one kind is always the defect of qualities. The very qualities which give the personal character to Mr. Allan's work are only such as might offend those who are not in sympathy with his aims, for these are not of the academic order, which sacrifices truth for highly-wrought surface finish and loses touch with outdoor nature in the studio.

They are qualities which must appeal even with eloquence to all—save perhaps the very few for whom the headlines of the coasts of the British Isles and the sea itself have no pleasant meaning.

It is in his scenes of fishing ports that the most characteristic of all Mr. Allan's painting has been done, and his interpretation of the sea has always been most successful, whether in representing still, glassy days, or when the water is rough and turbulent. His power of giving the sense of distance—that appreciation of the atmosphere veiling the distant ships—is a very noticeable feature of these sea-pieces. He has painted this class of subject perhaps with greater affection than he has painted anything else, and does not fail to infect the spectator with his own pleasure in the moods of the sea and in the hard life of the fishing ports—a life which, by the way, for all its hardness seems conducted so quietly and almost with leisure by the fisherman. All the little incidents of the port fascinate his brush, and perhaps they have never been rendered with greater fidelity to the scene or with more charm.

There is to be noticed through all his work a restraint which adds so much to its dignity. The skies are quiet, never are large clouds piled up over the sails of the ships in those grandiose attempts at decorative composition that are now so common. Here there is reverence, a brush waiting upon nature, and always charged with an extraordinary sincerity. Given some perfection of craft and vision, what is needed to ensure true art but sincerity of feeling? There is much perfection of craft in Mr. Allan's work, as we know, and an

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

... painters, as the ... most distinct ... to whom ... walks about ... as a gifted ... with sufficient ... then seems ... appeals to him, for ... will ... lack of variety ... tions, as every ... they will ... form of ... to face ... subjects, or ... interest ... half the thing ... world. Has ... interest in his ... part from the ... sole it affects ... the modern ... could deny ... than what, I ... return ... subjects ... interests want ... other scenes ... d by his ... only as distinctly. ... a wide ... ed be found with ... we think ... that only those ... which ... a man will stimulate ... tette a ...

... the success to which a ... necessary perhaps to try ... his work reaches its ... two kinds of defects in art, ... the defect of qualities. The ... give the personal character to Mr. ... only such as might offend ... in sympathy with his aims, for ... the academic order, which sacri- ... highly-wrought surface finish and ... with outdoor nature in the studio.

They are qualities which must appeal even with eloquence to all—save perhaps the very few for whom the headlines of the coasts of the British Isles and the sea itself have no pleasant meaning.

It is in his scenes of fishing ports that the most characteristic of all Mr. Allan's painting has been done, and his interpretation of the sea has always been most successful, whether in representing still, glassy days, or when the water is rough and turbulent. His power of giving the sense of distance—that appreciation of the atmosphere veiling the distant ships—is a very noticeable feature of these sea-pieces. He has painted this class of subject perhaps with greater affection than he has painted anything else, and does not fail to infect the spectator with his own pleasure in the moods of the sea and in the hard life of the fishing ports—a life which, by the way, for all its hardness seems conducted so quietly and almost with leisure by the fisherman. All the little incidents of the port fascinate his brush, and perhaps they have never been rendered with greater fidelity to the scene or with more charm.

There is to be noticed through all his work a restraint which adds so much to its dignity. The skies are quiet, never are large clouds piled up over the sails of the ships in those grandiose attempts at decorative composition that are now so common. Here there is reverence, a brush waiting upon nature, and always charged with an extraordinary sincerity. Given some perfection of craft and vision, what is needed to ensure true art but sincerity of feeling? There is much perfection of craft in Mr. Allan's work, as we know, and an

"YASAKA PAGODA, KYOTO, JAPAN," FROM THE WATER-COLOUR BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

"SAILING INTO PORT." FROM THE OIL
PAINTING BY, ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

New Sculpture by Alfred Drury, A.R.A.

"SEAWARD BOUND" (OIL)

(The property of the Liverpool Corporation)

BY ROBERT W. ALLAN, R.W.S.

unusual alertness of vision. It is the vision which accounts for successful colour, it is the vision that accounts for everything in the canvas; but how many painters fight against the restraining influence of things seen just as they are, and push their art ever further and further towards mere effectiveness of handling, effectiveness in its cheaper sense, the sense in which it is theatrical, the arrangement and invention of one who in his canvas has lost touch with the element of truth from which he started, who has gone beyond the close knowledge of nature without which all invention of colour and composition is but an unreal display!

I was greatly impressed by a picture of Mr. Allan's early days which I lately saw—The Funeral of Carlyle. This impressive canvas should surely find its way to the national collection. Something of the solitariness of Carlyle's spirit is conveyed in this picture of the humble procession, and the painter who painted it showed how well he could experience the atmosphere of solemnity and sorrow pervading the scene. Other atmospheres he has entered with the same susceptibility in his art. Is it not the same sense in him which has enabled him to convey the emotional element in the return to port of some lonely fishing boats leaving behind them long stretches of grey sea?

T. M. W.

SOME NEW SCULPTURE BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

THE improvement which has become evident during recent years in the quality of architectural sculpture can certainly be counted as due in some measure to an advance in the public taste. People are not so easily satisfied as they were not much more than a quarter of a century ago with the common-places of the stonemason, with mere journeyman work neither decoratively interesting nor architecturally significant; they want something now which has an appreciable degree of artistic importance to justify its existence. It is recognised that the ornamental features of a building of any pretensions must be made the subject of special study, and must be dealt with seriously by an artist who is capable of treating them with judicious originality and correct understanding of the purpose which these adornments have to fulfil. There is growing up a healthy tendency to ridicule ornament that is bad in itself or misplaced on the building to which it is supposed to give the finishing touches; and this tendency is to be welcomed, because it helps on the development of a sound style in decorative sculpture and encourages the more efficient artists to make the most of the oppor-

MAIN ENTRANCE, VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM, WITH SCULPTURE
BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

New Sculpture by Alfred Drury, A.R.A.

STATUE OF THE PRINCE CONSORT TO BE PLACED OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM

BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

tunities that come to them in this branch of their practice.

Of course much credit for this advance in the public taste must be given to the architects who at the outset sought the co operation of able sculptors in carrying out those details which needed to be handled by specialists in decoration, but as much credit is also due to the sculptors who have realised the great possibilities of architectural work and have adapted themselves readily to the conditions under which it could be most satisfactorily practised. Architects and sculptors together have proved that fine sculpture can be made an essential part of the design of a building, adding to its attractiveness and amplifying its artistic meaning, and that the better this sculpture is in itself the more efficiently will it satisfy the particular demand that is made upon it. Therefore the people who have any understanding at all of the essentials of architectural achievement have come to expect a higher type of effort than was usual a generation or so ago, and to insist upon the maintenance of a standard of accomplishment which is clearly worth upholding. They have learned how things can be and should be done, and now they are rightly discontented if anything less than they consider themselves entitled to ask for is offered them.

As such a feeling has to be reckoned with it is natural enough that present-day architects should seek the assistance of sculptors of repute whose work they know will be beyond reproach ; and it

FIGURES OF ST. GEORGE AND ST. MICHAEL OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM
BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

New Sculpture by Alfred Drury, A.R.A.

SCULPTURED PANELS OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

was only to be expected that in such a building as the new Victoria and Albert Museum the best men available should have been called upon to execute those ornamental details which count for so much in the æsthetic interest of the design. A great deal of sculpture has been introduced in the exterior of the Museum, and this, as a whole, is excellently representative of what is most hopeful in the art

SCULPTURED PANELS OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

New Sculpture by Alfred Drury, A.R.A.

SCULPTURED PANEL OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

One of the chief of these artists is Mr. Alfred Drury, to whom has been entrusted the series of panels which are arranged in the arch over the main entrance to the Museum, in the Cromwell Road front. These panels, with the statue of Queen Victoria, supported by figures of St. Michael and St. George, which crowns the arch, and the two flanking symbolical figures, make up Mr. Drury's contribution to the ornamentation of the building, and they are specially deserving of attention as examples of architectural sculpture at its best. Mr. Drury by temperament and experience is exceptionally qualified for carrying out work which requires to be of our times, and shows convincingly what a number of men we have amongst us now who are well able to undertake serious artistic responsibilities.

treated with monumental dignity, but at the same time with graceful simplicity. He knows thoroughly the value of rhythmical line and generous largeness of form and the importance of avoiding that rigidity of composition and excessive formality of arrangement which can be reckoned among the chief faults of the sculpture which was a few years back commonly associated with architecture; and he has an infallible instinct for choosing the right middle course between too severe reticence and over-emphatic assertion. Restraint there is, undoubtedly, in everything he does, but it is the restraint of an artist who knows exactly how to keep his work in right relation to its surroundings without stripping it of its individuality.

SCULPTURED PANELS OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

New Sculpture by Alfred Drury, A.R.A.

SCULPTURED PANELS OVER MAIN ENTRANCE TO VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM BY ALFRED DRURY, A.R.A.

In these panels he had to deal with a problem of some complexity. Their object is to be not only decorative but in some sort didactic as well—to set forth with due insistence a saying of Sir Joshua Reynolds which has been appropriately chosen as the motto to be inscribed over the doors of the museum—and in treating them he was necessarily obliged to make the words of this motto definitely prominent in the design. He had, too, to keep a strict congruity between the successive panels, but at the same time to avoid monotonous repetition of forms; and always he had to remember the architectural aim of his reliefs and to resist every temptation to make them pictorially effective. That he has overcome these difficulties, and that in overcoming them he has shown himself to be possessed of notable discretion and sound taste, cannot be questioned; but he can also be said to have found in this commission an opportunity for the display of artistic intelligence of the highest order. The occasion was one which might well inspire an artist to make a special effort—he was required to put himself permanently in evidence at the very entrance to a national institution in which the best examples of the art of the world are gathered together—but all men do not possess the power to rise to a great occasion. That Mr. Drury, having his opportunity, has turned it to such admirable account, and has justified so decisively his reputation as a sculptor of brilliant ability, is clear proof of his temperamental qualifications for the exacting profession in which he has made such marked success. He is a thinker as well as a worker, a man who can respond to the inspiration of the right moment, and who can by the manner of his response impress others with the strength of his conviction.

Mr. W. Goscombe John, A.R.A., sculptor, and Mr. John Belcher, A.R.A., architect, were last month elected full members of the Royal Academy, in succession to Mr. Alfred Gilbert, resigned, and Mr. R. W. Macbeth, retired. On the same occasion Mr. Bertram Mackennal, sculptor, was elected Associate, and M. J. P. Laurens, the distinguished French painter, was made Honorary R.A.

MOSAIC FREREDOS IN THE ESSEX CHURCH, NOTTING HILL

(See page 109)

BY HENRY HOLIDAY

THE DECORATIVE WORK OF MR. HENRY HOLIDAY.

THE prominent position which Mr. Henry Holiday holds among the artists in this country who devote themselves particularly to decorative practice has been gained by the long and strenuous pursuit of more than ordinarily high artistic ideals. He has aimed always at a pure style of design, at a kind of classic severity in which every hint of meretricious prettiness or trivial elegance is scrupulously avoided. The art in which he believes is unemotional in the sense that it does not depend for its meaning upon theatrical sentiment or for its success upon an appeal to any of the baser instincts; but it is by no means lacking in the power to excite æsthetic emotions or to satisfy a demand for beauty of the nobler type. It is earnest, studied, and correct, logical enough both in what it presents and in what it disregards, directed by a clearly defined purpose, and controlled consistently by a personal conviction.

That Mr. Holiday is pre-eminently a classicist, and sincerely a follower of the Greek convention, becomes immediately evident when the general character of his work is examined. Whatever the direction in which he chances at the moment to be engaged the underlying idea in his production is always to realise the antique perfection of form and the Greek exquisiteness of line. The Gothic angularity and the Italian suavity seem to leave him untouched: the one is too rugged and abrupt to please his taste, the other too demonstrative and, perhaps, too sensuous to fit in with his idea of artistic expression. But the largeness, the dignity, and above all the purity of the antique achievement give him the exact measure of inspiration that he desires and excite completely all his sympathies.

Yet it is not a dry and archæological style that he has evolved from his study of Greek art: he interprets it through the medium of his own personality. It is in his sculpture that he shows himself most closely a follower of the tradition he prefers; the work he has done in this branch of practice is entirely classic in intention and feeling. But in his pictures and designs he allows himself greater latitude, and though he does not depart from the Greek spirit, he does not adhere so absolutely to the letter of the classic convention; and wisely he does not limit his own freedom of action by ignoring the possible developments of that phase of ancient art to which he turns for guidance. For the subjects of many of his pictures he has laid the classic myths under contribution, but even in those like The Meeting of Dante and Beatrice—now in the Liverpool Corporation Gallery—

"THE LAST SUPPER." PANEL FORMING PART OF EAST WALL DECORATION
IN THE CHURCH OF ST. CHAD, KIRKBY. BY HENRY HOLIDAY.

THE ESSEX CHURCH, NOTTING HILL: VIEW
OF EAST END DECORATION. DESIGNED AND GIVEN BY RONALD JONES. REREDOS AND WINDOWS BY HENRY HOLIDAY

Mr. Henry Holiday's Decorative Work

which deal with incidents in later times, he does not, in his observation of the character of the period he is illustrating, forget that he is a classicist by conviction. The scholarly simplicity of his paintings and their dignified repose of manner are evidently founded upon his belief in the infallibility of the Greek masters.

In his designs for stained glass and mural decorations the same largeness of quality that distinguishes his pictures can be very clearly perceived. The sketch for The Last Supper, for instance, with its severely sculptural character and balanced formality, is conceived in an essentially classic spirit; and the church windows, of which he has executed a vast number during his long career as a designer, show definitely how much more he is concerned with breadth of effect, and with careful adjustment of part to part, than with the elaboration of insignificant details which are not vitally important in the design. Always he keeps in view the main facts by which his artistic intention can best be explained, and always he seeks to set forth this intention clearly, simply, and in a sense impersonally, trusting for the success of his work to the completeness of his main statement, not to his ingenuity in filling up a hastily imagined scheme of decoration with pleasing but irrelevant accessories.

Mr. Holiday's first experiences as a designer were gained nearly fifty years ago. He was born in 1839, and after some lessons in drawing from William Cave Thomas went to work at Leigh's art school in Newman Street, where so many well-known artists have commenced the practice of their craft. At the end of 1854 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where he made such effective use of his opportunities that he was able four years later to contribute to the Academy exhibition his first picture, a landscape, which was not only hung on the line, but sold immediately to a well-known collector. From that time onwards for some years he was a regular exhibitor of important pictures, and even after he had decided to devote himself chiefly to decorative work he continued to produce at fairly frequent intervals pictures in oil and water-colour and to make occasional digressions into sculpture.

It was at the suggestion of Messrs. Powell & Sons, of the Whitefriars Glass Works, that he turned his attention to stained-glass design. They needed an artist to replace Burne-Jones, who had in the early 'sixties transferred his services to the firm which had just been founded by his friend, William Morris, and Mr. Holiday, they thought, was just the man for whom they were seeking. Their confidence in his ability was amply justified by results; the first designs he prepared for them were much approved of and showed so definitely the extent of his capacities that he became at once one of their most trusted artists. During his direct connection with Messrs Powell, which lasted for many years, he executed a great number of important commissions, but he has done, besides, much work independently which is certainly of not less importance, and a

EAST WINDOW, SUMMERFIELDS SCHOOL, OXFORD. DESIGNED BY HENRY HOLIDAY. GLASS PAINTED BY W. GLASBY.

Mr. Henry Holiday's Decorative Work

CHANCEL WINDOW IN BRECHIN CATHEDRAL, N. WALES

DESIGNED BY HENRY HOLIDAY

considerable amount of this work has been carried out in the stained-glass studios which he established for himself in 1890.

At the present time windows from his designs are to be found all over the world, and a complete list of his achievements in this one branch only of his practice would be quite astonishing as a record of his activity. The popularity of his work is entirely intelligible, because he has cultivated his instinctive sense of decorative propriety with unusual care and has given to the subject of stained-glass designing and stained-glass making a great deal of close and careful study. What are the particular characteristics of his style as a designer can be plainly seen in the examples which are reproduced here—these illustrations are instructive in their revelation of his methods.

One thing that is especially notable is the ingenuity with which he arranges the lines of the leading. The leads, as he treats them, become actual parts of his pattern and fill in the plainer spaces in his design with a tracery of carefully ordered lines; they are used—as can be seen in the East Window at Summerfields School—in the place of the architectural details commonly painted on the glass, and they give sufficient variety to the surroundings of the figures without overloading the design with unnecessary ornament. Another thing that can be commended is his avoidance of pictorial effects; he does not suggest by light and shade contrasts that the figures are in relief, or that they are affected by varieties of atmospheric tone. He draws rightly the distinction between a picture and a decoration, and does not fall into the mistake by which so many other glass designers have been misled of attempting arrangements which, though they are legitimate enough on a painted canvas, are out of place in a window, which must, of course, be treated as a flat surface.

Characteristically, too, he uses habitually small pieces of glass in preference to those of large size which are too often employed by the designers of the pictorial window, and in this way he not only escapes the necessity for much actual painting on the glass itself but secures also that jewel-like effect of varied colour which is so satisfying in the well-designed piece of stained-glass work. The illustrations of the windows in Brechin Cathedral and the Essex Church are well worth studying as instances of this manner of handling; they show quite his best application of his technical conviction and his logical expression of the belief that brilliancy rather than obscurity should be the quality most to be aimed at in window designing. In these, and in fact all the examples which could be produced of his work in this direction, the consistency with which he follows theories of practice based upon prolonged investigation and experience can be heartily commended, and none the less because these theories are not abstractions without any solid commonsense behind them, but the actual outcome of carefully tested knowledge.

Mr. Henry Holiday's Decorative Work

Stained-glass designing is, however, only one of Mr. Holiday's decorative activities. He is a prolific worker in many other forms of artistic accomplishment which can be applied to the purposes of decoration, and he has done much that is admirable in enamels, mosaic, and in a technical process known as "Opus Sectile"—to quote some of the methods of expression he has employed. One of his most interesting inventions—a device by which he was enabled to apply enamels to mural decorations on a large scale and in relief—was fully described in THE STUDIO four years ago, and the way in which he overcame the mechanical difficulties of the process was clearly explained. He has used this invention extensively, in church decoration especially, and there can be now no doubt of its value as a means of securing artistic effects. It offers special opportunities both to the modeller and the worker in colour, and it gives the artist who chooses it as his medium full scope for the exercise of his highest skill; and he has the comforting assurance that the permanence of the materials at his disposal takes away all cause for anxiety lest his work should suffer from any of those vicissitudes to which most forms of wall decoration are inevitably exposed.

In "opus sectile," to which also Mr. Holiday has devoted much attention, there is a mixture of the methods of working which are customary in stained-glass making and in the use of mosaic, though the processes of the art are such that it can be more aptly described as opaque stained glass than as a variation on mosaic. It is in its general principles based upon the inlaying in coloured marbles which was practised by the Romans; but the material now used is not marble but opaque coloured glass, which can be cut into the required shapes and pieced together to form the design, just as is done with the transparent glass in a window. The lines which define smaller details, like the features of a face or the folds of a drapery, are painted on the surface of the glass and burnt in, exactly as they are in a window; but the pieces of glass, after being fired in a glass-painter's oven, are not fixed together with leads but with cement, by which they are attached to the wall. What light and shade

TRANSEPT WINDOW IN THE ESSEX CHURCH, NOTTING HILL
DESIGNED BY HENRY HOLIDAY

based upon the inlaying in coloured marbles which was practised by the Romans; but the material now used is not marble but opaque coloured glass, which can be cut into the required shapes and pieced together to form the design, just as is done with the transparent glass in a window. The lines which define smaller details, like the features of a face or the folds of a drapery, are painted on the surface of the glass and burnt in, exactly as they are in a window; but the pieces of glass, after being fired in a glass-painter's oven, are not fixed together with leads but with cement, by which they are attached to the wall. What light and shade the artist has to deal with, the materials at his disposal, and the anxiety to work steadily from any of the vicissitudes to which most forms of decoration are inevitably exposed.

In "opus sectile," to which also Mr. Holiday has devoted much attention, there is a mixture of the methods of working which are customary in stained-glass making and in the use of mosaic, though the processes of the art are such that it can be more aptly described as opaque stained glass than as a variation on mosaic. It is in its general principles

TRANSEPT WINDOW IN THE ESSEX CHURCH, NOTTINGHAM DESIGNED BY HENRY HOLIDAY

STUDY IN DRAPERY
BY HENRY HOLIDAY.

Mr. Henry Holiday's Decorative Work

effect there may be in the design is obtained by painting, not, as in mosaic, by the use of tesserae of various tones of colour to suggest shading.

"Opus sectile," in fact, resembles mosaic only in being a form of decoration for wall surfaces, which is carried out by fastening pieces of vitreous material to the wall with cement; in all other respects it is treated like stained glass. As, however, the question of the degree to which the glass may be obscured by colour—an important one in window designing—does not arise in this opaque work, the artist has in some directions greater freedom of action, though, of course, he cannot arrive at anything like the same sumptuousness of colour which transparent glass will give him. The advantage which this process has over mosaic is that it admits of higher finish and more realism of effect, consequently it can be turned to good account for decorations which have to be viewed fairly closely; mosaic is only satisfactory at a distance sufficiently great to cause the abruptness of the transitions from one set of tesserae to another to become hardly perceptible.

As Mr. Holiday has ample practical experience of the possibilities of both these modes of working, he is able to speak with authority concerning the manner in which they should be treated, separately or in combination—for he has used a mixture of mosaic and "opus sectile" on many occasions with complete success. He advocates strongly the advantages of the latter process over the former for decorations on a small scale, though he admits that it cannot be made to rival mosaic in splendour of effect. But mosaic, he holds, is best applied in large masses, and at a considerable distance from the eye; and necessarily, from the slow and elaborate way in which it must be worked, it is far more costly than "opus sectile." These practical considerations cannot be overlooked by the decorative artist, whose commissions are often contingent upon the possibility of producing striking results by a comparatively small outlay, so that an invention which reduces cost without diminishing artistic opportunity well deserves attention.

Indeed, it can fairly be said of Mr. Holiday that he is as ready now as at any time in his career to test devices which promise results worthy of respect. A strenuous worker he has always been, but his strenuousness has not been misdirected by fanatical preferences for that to which he has been long accustomed. He has no prejudices against new ideas simply because they are new, and he shirks no labour which will give him some additions to that stock of knowledge which he has been gathering together throughout his life. Just as he prepares for the carrying out of his large designs by making an immense number of minute and scholarly studies, so he fits himself to practise a new artistic method by investigating closely all its peculiar characteristics, and by finding out for himself what are its merits and defects. He is consistent enough in this, for to a man with his advanced æsthetic ideals, imperfect understanding of any of the processes of his art would seem a sort of reflection upon his sincerity—it would imply that he took but a careless view of his responsibilities, and such an implication he would be the first to resent.

STUDY OF DRAPERY BY HENRY HOLIDAY

Chinese Pictures

THE GODDESS WANG-MU WITH MONKEY MING DYNASTY

CHINESE PICTURES IN BERLIN.

THE accompanying illustrations have been selected from an exhibition of Chinese paintings recently organised by the Berlin Royal Academy of Arts. This exhibition proved an artistic event of the first order. There was hardly a connoisseur among the visitors, and nothing but scepticism seemed to greet these far-travelled foreigners; yet their qualities soon won for them a complete victory. Never, indeed, has there been in Europe an occasion to study Chinese painters so thoroughly. Here, in a collection of 230 pictures, was a comprehensive view of Chinese art from the eighth to the eighteenth century, from the Tang to the Tsching dynasty.

The more people studied the stronger grew the regret towards the close of the show that no citizenship had been granted to such aliens. Germans are well trained in admiration for Japanese art, and here they could look into its foundations. They could recognise the sources of its decorative cleverness, spiritual aperçu and refinement of taste and feeling, but they discovered far richer stores in realistic faithfulness and sensitive charm. An astonishing accord of the Asiatic and the European soul became perceptible. The exotic character vanished, the mysteries of cult and custom did not perplex, one felt attracted by the truly human element, that fraternising feature of all genuine art.

The paintings exhibited were all water-colours, mostly painted on silk, but some on paper made of vegetable fibre. Much of their splendid colouring had faded away, some had been damaged by damp and time, and others looked rather indifferent. For all that they called up lively reminiscences of days spent in studying in Continental galleries.

CARP

MING DYNASTY

Chinese Pictures

"PRIEST TAMO GOES HUNTING IN MONGOLIA: EVENING APPROACHES AND SNOW BEGINS TO FALL" BY TANG-YIN (1522-1567)

This female face recalled the tender spirit of the old Cologne Madonnas, these trailing gowns and fluttering ribbons and the bizarre grace of gesture revealed the Botticellis and Crivellis of old China; there were delicacies that smacked of Eyck and Gozzoli, and there was the massiveness of Rubens and Jordaens. In method also variations became visible, although the general aspect attested the prevalence of the draughtsman, the calligraphist. Some of the sketches were handled with impressionistic boldness, while some paintings, on the other hand, were executed with pointillistic finesse. Strange, indeed, to our feeling appeared the Chinese Olympus with its demigods, its fauns and bacchantes. Chinese artists did not mind representing their revels and debaucheries, but in this collection there was no trace of nudity. Ever present seemed a feature of delicacy and chasteness. It was paramount in the exquisiteness of the drawing, in the blue chosen by the artists, where only burning red would have satisfied our demands. Charming pictures of home life, in which the woman, or rather the lady, plays a superior part, scenes from the public life of the people, with less of the Hogarth and more of the Chodowiecki note, portraits, landscapes, animals,

"LADY AT THE BLOSSOMING PLUM-TREE ON A SPRING EVENING: THE MOON IS RISING." BY YÜN-CHEN (ABOUT 1620)

Chinese Pictures

PORTRAIT OF A FAMOUS CHINESE BEAUTY
BY CHEN-CHAO-SHOU (ABOUT 1500)

flowers, formed the register of motifs. One of the portraits carries with it a romantic bit of history. It is that of a beauty (above) who is frequently mentioned in Chinese literature. Her portrait was one of the 300 submitted in accordance with custom to the Emperor in order that he might select a wife, but the story goes that the painter not receiving a bribe failed to do justice to her charms, and the Emperor instead of making her his consort gave her to a Mongolian prince. When the Son of Heaven first saw her soon after her marriage he wept bitterly.

The main enjoyment often centred in the finish, in the treatment of costume, of plumage, of the skin of the animal, of the veining of the petal, the finish of the Düreresque draughtsman. From the standpoint of our European art-training one could not fail to recognise that scientific form was not strictly observed by these Chinese artists, that defects of anatomy, occasionally also of psychology, were perceptible. We missed the intelligence of observation in perspective, in the gradation of tones, in the art of sacrificing details to unity of object, and yet we went home completely captivated. The depth of feeling, the subtlety of vibrating colours, the eloquence of expression, and the picturesqueness and grace of composition—all these characteristics betokened high art.

The oldest and highest epoch of Chinese painting was that of the Sung dynasty, when artists attained their perfection in landscape; and a few of such precious and venerable works figured in the exhibition. During the three centuries of the Ming dynasty artists gradually

"SEWING WOMAN" SIGNED CHANG-WEI
(BEGINNING OF TCHING EPOCH)

Chinese Pictures

"TWO MEN PLAYING"

BY TANG-YIN

weakened in their cravings for classical perfection. Then men loved principally to paint with utmost conscientiousness the amenities of social life and all sorts of realistic objects. High aspirations had not quite died out, they were frequently lingering and speak to us from one or the other picture with pathos and tenderness. "Our painting," said a Japanese writer of the 18th century, "is the flower, that of China is the fruit in its maturity." But in the course of time this beautiful fruit has more and more undergone decay. It was delightful to find an opportunity of seeing it in all its seductive freshness. Connoisseurs have supposed some of the paintings in the collection to be only copies, but even this would not diminish their value, as perfect copies are ranked in China as highly as originals.

It was from purely patriotic motives that Mrs. Olga Julia Wegener, the wife of the well-known traveller, Dr. Georg Wegener, brought these treasures first to Berlin. She had carefully collected them in China after serious study of Chinese art and with the assistance of competent critics, and I understand that it is her intention to exhibit them presently in London. It was a real satisfaction to her that the Royal Academy of Arts in Berlin acknowledged the importance of her possessions by arranging for them an exhibition within its own distinguished galleries.

JARNO JESSEN.

"NEW YEAR'S MORNING IN A MANTCHU FAMILY: ITINERANT MIRROR-POLISHER IS POLISHING MIRROR"
SIGNED HSÜ-TIENG-K'UN (ABOUT 1650)

Architectural Gardening.—IV.

"LOVERS" BEGINNING OF CHING DYNASTY
(See previous article)

ARCHITECTURAL GARDEN- ING.—IV. WITH ILLUSTRATIONS AFTER DESIGNS BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A., AND F. L. GRIGGS.

THE unity in design of the house and garden as a matter of plan has been touched upon in the notes accompanying the preceding illustrations, but very little, if any, reference has been made to the equally important question of detail. There should be evident in the design as a whole the same coherent intention in detail as in plan. A scheme which may be quite admirable in itself and satisfactory in its treatment of both house and garden in general idea may be seriously marred, if not altogether spoilt, by want of thought not only in the design but in the arrangement, in the scale, and in the character of the detail. The same watchful care of the work is required from the designer in this particular as in any other; it is, perhaps, as severe a test of his powers of design, of his sense of proportion, of form and keenness of judgment and delicate taste as could well be required of him. The utmost care and patience are necessary at this stage of the problem, for it is of the greatest importance that the details of the garden architecture should be in absolute sympathy and agreement with those of the house itself and have that same kind of intimate connection which is to be found in a thoughtfully designed interior of a house and all its decoration, even down to the details of the furnishing.

To accomplish this end in garden design is no easy matter, and can only be successful after much patient experiment and comparison through the medium of either perspective drawings for the general scheme and models wherever it is possible on the actual site. The latter will be found most valuable in the arrangement or placing of the main decorative features, such as lead figures, sundials, balustrades, etc., the scale and proportion of which should always be judged on the site and never left

A GARDEN ENTRANCE DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E.
MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

HOUSE WITH A BRIDGE APPROACH. DESIGNED BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A., AND F. L. GRIGGS. DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

Architectural Gardening.—IV.

to be settled by designs on paper, however carefully they may be worked out. The difference between the look of a design in elevation and in perspective, great and misleading as it is always, is not less than between the look of a carefully drawn perspective and the actual effect of the completed work in the round. It is a trite and obvious thing to say that all designs should be made in perspective. That, of course, goes without saying. It is equally necessary to insist on rough outline models for all the essential decorative details of a garden design. Much unnecessary expense and many unpleasant surprises may be avoided by these simple means, and no better method of arranging and placing the desired points of interest in a scheme can be found. To illustrate the advantage of models it is only necessary to take the very ordinary idea of a stone pier terminated by either a vase or lead figure. It is obvious that the right relation of this ornament to the base or pedestal cannot be so satisfactorily determined by a scale design on paper as by a model placed on the pier itself, because it is then seen in the "round." In the case of figures surmounting a pedestal this is most important, for unless the proportions of these are very carefully judged, either the figures or the pedestal, which by themselves may be quite beautiful, may be made to look ridiculous.

In the larger masses and general outline both of form and colour the perspective drawing is most valuable in the first stages of the design, and even in the final stages; but it is always necessary to supplement and correct and compare this with experiments on the site.

In the initial ideas for any scheme, perspective drawing is essential; geometrical drawings in plan, section, or elevation should never be relied upon as guides in questions of scale or proportion, but only as means to an end in the execution of the work.

In a former article reference was made to the infinite variety and interest in design it is possible to obtain in bringing a water treatment into a scheme of house and garden. It is a matter of surprise that so little advantage, comparatively speaking, is taken of such a delightful medium for obtaining attractive and picturesque results. It is only necessary to think of an example like Ightham Moat, in Kent, Maxstoke, in Warwickshire, or Broughton Castle, in Oxfordshire, to feel how much modern garden design may be improved by the inclusion of so simple a medium for effect. Of course in the old days and in the instances just given, the water way was planned for quite a different purpose, a purpose which does not exist to-day. But that is no reason why the suggestion it conveys for a beautiful feature in modern gardens should not be adopted. The objections usually raised in connection with water around or near a house can be easily disposed

GARDEN HOUSE WITH DOVECOTE

DESIGNED BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.
AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

A GREEN FORECOURT. DESIGNED
AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

Architectural Gardening.—IV.

of by a little careful thought in arranging it in the plan.

Perhaps the most surprising thing in this connection is the usual omission to include water as a prominent feature even in the design of a riverside house and garden. The suggestions the river itself gives are many and delightful, especially if it includes near the site one of those many pleasant ways called "backwaters" in which our English rivers abound. To bring a portion of this into a design, or to construct smaller channels leading from the backwater to the new garden, and then to terminate, perhaps, in a boat-house, which may form a prominent portion of the garden decoration, seems an obvious thing to do, and yet it is difficult to remember an instance of this on any of our well-known riversides.

A suggestion for something of this nature is intended in the design for A House with a Bridge approach (page 121). This has been imagined near a main stream, the bridge terrace and boathouse entrance are made integral parts of the design; in this way a picturesque result is obtained, which grows naturally out of common-sense requirements, and is not, therefore, an affectation.

In A Riverside House with a Terrace (page 126) a house is imagined as built on the banks of a small stream linking itself with a larger one—the use of the smaller streams being to convey small pleasure craft (the house suggested is of considerable size) to and from the main stream, and to feed ponds and water gardens. In this scheme the boat-house, although not shown in the drawing, forms a prominent feature in the design, and is, in plan, connected directly with the main river on one side and the smaller stream on the other.

The Garden-house with Dovecote, on page 122, is designed for two levels, and is part of the general scheme for the house just described for the riverside. A plan of the entire scheme, showing the connection of this portion with the rest of the garden, will be given later.

The design entitled A Green Forecourt (page 123) shows a raised terrace connecting two gardens, the hedge being placed across the end of a tennis court or bowling green, and is intended for a situation where differences of level form interesting problems in design. In such cases as these the difficulties the varying levels afford often prove, when solved, to be the greatest charm and interest of the work. It is so seldom, however, that full advantage is taken of what nature has to offer in such things.

The garden entrance on page 120 is at the end of a narrow yew walk. In design it is an attempt

A COTTAGE DOOR AND GATE

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

A SEASIDE HOUSE AND GARDEN AT HAPPISBURGH, NORFOLK. DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

A RIVERSIDE HOUSE WITH TERRACE. DE-SIGN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A., AND
F. L. GRIGGS. DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

TIRLEY COURT, CHESHIRE: EAST SIDE. DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY
C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

The International Society's Ninth Exhibition

to carry on the tradition of the work at Bath so well known in connection with the houses of Wood and Ralph Allen.

The Cottage Door and Gate on page 124 is an attempt to suggest the attainment of a pleasant and interesting effect by simple and straightforward means. It must have occurred to many who deplore the ugliness of the modern cottage that the exercise of just a little more taste and deliberation, and the suppression of the modern builder's senseless craze for foolish so-called ornament, would result in an immense gain to the countryside. The materials suggested in this design are those to be found ready at hand in Norfolk—hand-made bricks and tiles for the walls and reed thatching for the roof.

The Seaside House (page 125) has been designed for the same county, and is about to be carried out at Happisburgh, in Norfolk, as a portion of a scheme for a seaside village. The house shown on the left of the sketch is at present divided into two somewhat disreputable cottages. It is connected on the north-east side by a cattle-shelter and an old barn shown on the right of the sketch; between these two buildings is an old yard, which is proposed to be changed into the square-paved garden as indicated. The hovel or shelter with some slight structural alterations is made into a verandah, which shelters the garden from the north-east wind, and the large barn provides ample accommodation for a covered children's play-room, with swings, etc. This room and the verandah have windows overlooking the sea.

The pencil sketch of the east side of Tirley Court (page 127) shows another view of the garden entrance of this house, with the connection by a stone-paved path, bordered with roses, and the octagonal garden, which is one of the principal points of interest in this garden. This has been built as indicated, except that the hedge, suggested in yew in the foreground of the sketch as surrounding the octagonal garden, has been changed to one built of the local stone.

On page xxvii. of the Winter Number of THE STUDIO reference is made to the Dutch Garden at Eaton Hall. It should have been stated that this garden was designed by Mr. C. E. Mallows, F.R.I.B.A., together with other work (including the bridge over the lake) which he executed at Eaton Hall for the Duchess of Westminster.

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY'S NINTH EXHIBITION.

FOLLOWING the precedent of a year ago, the International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers has this year divided its exhibition into two parts, one general and the other special.

It is only with the general section that we propose to deal now, and in so far as this is concerned, it has not been one of the best of the series. Especially, perhaps, is this true of the larger oil paintings. There are a certain number of the finest contemporary painters who are members of this Society, so that it is impossible for the Society to hold an exhibition which would fail of exciting interest. Whether all these do their duty by the Society and send their very finest work of the year, we have no means of telling. If they do, then there are cases in which we must decide that no

AN APPROACH ROAD

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

"A WET MORNING AT SEGOVIA MARKET." FROM A WOOD
ENGRAVING BY SYDNEY LEE

The International Society's Ninth Exhibition

new inspirations have come to the painters lately. In the graphic section more variety prevailed, and much of the work was energetic and full of new impulse, making amends to some extent for the shortcomings elsewhere.

In the first or West Room, M. Charles Cottet, in his Vue de Village de Pont en Royans, a canvas characteristic of the work he sent this year, has mastered an intricate composition of houses, a favourite theme of his. Here were also figure paintings so notable as Mr. W. Orpen's A Young Man from the West, Mr. Charles Shannon's The Bath, and The Bathers, by Daumier. M. Maurice Denis, whose work has excited enthusiasm abroad, has in La Vierge à l'École not achieved any great distinction of form, but the work is novel because no tube of colour had apparently been touched that was not novel in its particular shade, a rare effect being obtained in which primary colours are not harmonised or contrasted, but put aside in favour of those rarer tints with which the artist's colour-man's catalogue familiarises us. In this part of the exhibition we had, too, Mr. Charles Rickett's canvases, full of a sombre beauty of colour and charged with imaginative inspiration and dramatic power. This artist has passed through many interesting phases, but the reiteration of certain characteristics in his later paintings does not, we hope, denote that the process of growth has come to a standstill. Neither can Mr. A. D. Peppercorn free himself from sameness in landscape, though he has been, and is, such a master of emotional painting; and sameness, too, was apparent in the work of other painters of distinction.

Mr. William Nicholson's art is always greatly stimulating, because it courts disaster in always grappling with new problems. Here in the interior picture of the Earl of Plymouth and his family the problem was one that only a painter of fresh energies and vision would have embraced, and Mr. Nicholson has, we think, come very near to a completely successful solution, though some of the pink-covered chairs appeared to us to be somewhat out of tone, for they seemed to come right out of the interior; some of the pink paint having the appearance of coming out before the figures as if suspended between the spectator and them. Another picture of very great interest in this room was Mr. Pryde's The Doctor, a picture charged with the romance of which his brush is always so expressive.

We were attracted to some pictures by Mr. Arthur B. Davies, especially one in this room, Wavering Twilight, delicate and fantastic, with sensitiveness of tone and colour. Besides the Cottet landscapes there were in this part to be noted Mr. W. Dacres Adams's The Gateway, M. J. C. W. Cossaar's The Garden Entrance, but especially M. Emile Claus' L'Heure de la Rentrée.

In the North Room one of the most important canvases was Mr. William Strang's The Interruption, a work of fine composition and feeling, and expressing Mr. Strang's sense of colour more

"VALLÉE D'AMPRÈZZO" (PASTEL)

BY SIMON BUSSY

"THE MALLARD." FROM THE WATER-
COLOUR BY JOSEPH CRAWHALL

The International Society's Ninth Exhibition

harmoniously than it has often been expressed in his larger works. The Isles of the Sea, the only work by which Mr. D. Y. Cameron was represented in the exhibition, is perhaps one of the finest of his landscapes; the quality of the painting, its restraint and suggestion of still atmosphere, made it a very restful and beautiful spot in the centre of the left wall. The Luxembourg Gardens of Mr. Alexander Jamieson, and the same painter's Dieppe Harbour, were works of dignity and strength impressing themselves upon our memory. In Crépuscule tendre it was pleasant to see the art of Charles Conder, an artist of rare gifts, whose death we regret to record as having taken place shortly after the exhibition closed last month. Notable paintings also were Mr. W. W. Russell's Building the Ketch, Mr. Joseph Oppenheimer's On the Thames, and Mr. A. Ludovici's Portsmouth Harbour Lights, while H. Le Sidaner's La Fontaine and La Rue Royale represented his ecstatic colour-sense as wonderfully as ever. In his Standing by the Venetian Mirror, M. Blanche, who is one of the modern masters of interior painting, is not perhaps so successful as with his interiors without figures. Pictures by Forain and Monet and Manet accounted for a first impression of riches in this room.

In the South Room, from which nearly all our illustrations are derived, there were two important water-colours by Mr. Strang and twelve of Mr. Augustus John's virile drawings; a delightfully drawn Mallard by Joseph Crawhall (p. 131); drawings by Simon Bussy, C. Leandre and A. S. Hart-rick; water-colours of Mrs. Jamieson; some capital etchings by Messrs. Otto Fischer, H. Mulready Stone, and Anthony R. Barker; a noticeable set of lithotints by J. Kerr-Lawson, called "The Italian Set"; an interesting specimen from Gavarni's pencil; four works of the late Félicien Rops, and many drawings by M. Louis Legrand. A Wet Morning at Segovia Market, a wood engraving by Mr. Sydney Lee which we include among our illustrations, shows that artist advancing to a very unusual mastery of his craft, and the design is characteristically original and deserving of the highest praise. Jewellery of a beautiful order was exhibited in the South Room by Mr. H. Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. Gaskin.

The sculpture was dominated by the extremely beautiful female head by M. Rodin, La Jeunesse de Minerve; "dominated" is perhaps not quite the word to use, for its perfection is all of subtlety, to be studied before appreciated, but of a kind which distinguished it from everything else in the room, and even from the other head contributed by the sculptor, that of one of the Bourgeois de Calais,

"STILL LIFE"

BY WILLIAM NICHOLSON

The International Society's Ninth Exhibition

"RUINES DE DONJON DE MORTAGNE" (ETCHING)

BY A. LEPÈRE

from his famous group of the name. Good work was sent by Messrs. J. H. M. Furse, John Tweed, F. Derwent Wood, Charles Ricketts, Miss K. Bruce, and an American lady, Mrs. Vonnoh, whose small bronze figures deserve particular mention on account of their graceful modelling and the tender sentiment pervading them. A collection of sculpture by the late Augustus St. Gaudens, and some bronzes and marbles by the late J. B. Carpeaux, gave an additional source of interest this year.

"AVILA, ESPAGNE" (COLOURED ETCHING)

BY CHARLES COTTET

The Royal Scottish Academy's Exhibition

THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY'S ANNUAL EXHIBITION.

IN welcoming the Corporation of Edinburgh on their official visit to the Royal Scottish Academy Exhibition, previous to its being opened to the public, the President, Sir James Guthrie, said the Academy had been a good deal hampered by the fact that they had no space to do the duties which by their charter they were bound to fulfil. They had cut down the privileges of the members to the lowest point, and had tried to bring the Academy into as close touch as possible with the members of their fraternity who were outside it. There certainly was a time when the Academy monopolised its own wall-space, even to the disadvantage of the associates, but it may now be said that the Academy is generous to the outsider. Indeed, with the limited space at disposal it would be to the advantage of the exhibition were the Academy a little less generous and a trifle more discriminating than it has been this year, when a considerable number of pictures have been included in the collection that might well have been omitted. Sir James Guthrie made an effort a year or two ago to

"MOTHERHOOD" (BRONZE)
BY MRS. BESSIE POTTER VONNOH
(See previous article)

"HERRENHAUS" (ETCHING)

(See previous article)

BY OTTO FISCHER

raise the standard by lessening the number of works, but so much opposition arose that it had to be abandoned, and now the outsider, even though his attainment scarcely warrants it, finds a kindly if not always discriminating welcome. Two years hence, when the Academy will enter into possession of the Royal Institution building, members and associates will have more elbow-room, but it is to be hoped that the augmentation of wall-space will not result in more consideration than now obtains for second-rate work.

The loan work is small in quantity, but of greater importance than probably any exhibition since what was sarcastically called the Whistler year. The Keiller trustees have lent Orchardson's famous St. Helena, 1816, seen in Edinburgh for the first time, a picture which, for its purity of colour and beauty of tone, combined with its realisation of the tragedy of the last days of the banished Emperor, ranks as one of the masterpieces of historic painting. The portraits of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, by Sargent, which occupy prominent places in the Great Room, display this facile painter in more restrained mood than is customary. The highly individualistic if often unequal work of Sorolla is introduced to the Edinburgh public by two small but representative examples—a brilliant landscape and a seashore with figures, some of the wavelets being splashes of sunlight. Four examples of the work of the late A. D. Reid, brother of the ex-President of the Scottish Academy, are shown.

The Royal Scottish Academy's Exhibition

Vis-à-vis to the Sargent portraits are two by Sir James Guthrie. In the full-length seated portrait of Lady Stirling Maxwell the President is as suave and gracious as he is convincing. In the modelling and colour of the head I am reminded of a beautiful full-length portrait, by Carolus-Duran, which I saw some years ago, while in the draperies and background—a warm grey with splashes of soft blue—there is a Whistlerian simplicity altogether charming. In its fine scholarly qualities this portrait will rank as one of Sir James Guthrie's greatest achievements. In quite a different vein is Sir James' portrait of Mr. James Caldwell, which for robust colour and strong characterisation has not been excelled in Scottish male portraiture for several years. A portrait of Mr. J. G. Laing represents the low-water mark of John Lavery's art, and E. A. Walton sends only two small portraits—one of Sir William Crookes and the other Mrs. T. B. Bury, the latter of which contains some brilliant work. J. H. Lorimer is represented only by portraiture, of which the best is that of the Duke of Hamilton in Scottish regimentals. Among the other portraits may be mentioned those by Alexander Roche, R. Duddingston Herdman, and Fiddes Watt. Mr. Roche's Peggy will rank with his best expressions of sweet young womanhood.

"THE HARVEST TEAM"

BY CHARLES H. MACKIE, A.R.S.A.

The Royal Scottish Academy's Exhibition

Historical work has, since the infancy of the Academy, if we except the contributions by members who had migrated south, been singularly absent from its walls. Freed from the trammels of office Robert Gibb is again turning his attention to this type of work, and from the painter of the Alma picture and The Thin Red Line one welcomes Dargai, October 20, 1897. In these days of the khaki and "open order" the opportunities of the battle painter have not increased; the picturesque has been limited. Mr. Gibb, however, has grappled manfully with his difficulties. The Gordons showed at Dargai that they merited the appellation gallant as much as they had earned that of being gay; their eager but disciplined rush to the support of the Gurkhas is powerfully expressed; the tremendous difficulties they had to overcome is evidenced in the beetling cliffs and overhanging crags up which they had to climb. As an expression of the utmost in human effort to overcome natural difficulties, plus savage resistance, the painting is a noble tribute to heroics. William Hole is represented by The Temptation in the Wilderness, similar to that in his published pictorial Life of Jesus, except that the figure of Christ has been somewhat modified and thereby improved, and by a decorative panel showing the reading of the Charter of Incorporation at the first meeting of the Edinburgh Merchant Company. R. Payton Reid evidences a distinct advance in Harmony, a picture in which classic ideals are the dominant feature. G. Ogilvy Reid adds to his gallery of eighteenth-century figure subjects Our Plan of Campaign, showing a group of society ladies and gentlemen at the chess table.

From depicting children sporting in the sunshine on the shores of Largo bay, Hugh Cameron has this year turned to the antithesis. It would be idle to compare Sorrow and Sympathy with The Lonely Life in achievement—they are not comparable—but both show that while the joyous has always been the dominant note with Mr. Cameron, the other side of life has never been far in the background. The life of the workers on the seashore in northern France is the subject of two small but beautiful pictures by Robert McGregor, both remarkable for their rendering of diffused light, atmosphere, and tone. Not so exuberant in colour this year as usual, Mr. McGeorge gives greater importance to the figure in his principal picture, that of a young girl seated on the trunk of a tree by the banks of a reedy stream. Robert Hope's figure work is very gracious and convincing, beautiful in colour and refined in its harmonies. In his Tale of the Times of Old Graham Glen has gone a little beyond his present powers—he is not so successful as with the single figure; and John Duncan deserved better of the hanging Committee than the lofty position that has been given to his picture of the Celtic God of Love bringing the sea under a spell of Summer calm. Imaginative work of this type is too little in evidence in Scotland to be cold-shouldered. Two seashore subjects by Marshall Brown show continued progress, one in its rendering of motion, the other, Whelk Gatherers, in the painting of the figures and receding rocky shore, studded with water pools. The Critics, by James Riddell, is an interesting piece of genre with an element of humour.

Small are the claims that Robert Alexander makes on the wall space of the Academy, and of few can it be said that they so consistently maintain a high level. As an animal painter, Mr.

"ON THE NORTH SEA"

BY R. B. NISBET, R.S.A.

PORTRAIT OF JAMES CALDWELL, ESQ.
BY SIR JAMES GUTHRIE, P.R.S.A.

The Royal Scottish Academy's Exhibition

Alexander has never had an equal in the history of Scottish art, and The Master's Coat, a small picture of canine pets, is a gem in colour and characterisation. William Walls in Startled has produced a good example of a puma and cubs, and George Smith in A Cool Retreat shows sound draughtsmanship in the painting of the horses and foal at the water-trough.

Though it has often been painted, I believe no artist has hitherto attempted to render Loch Coruisk under the conditions expressed by Robert Burns in The Valley of the Shadow. Mr. Burns spent a month on board a yacht and studied the aspect of this most sublime of Scottish lochs under a moonlight effect. This he has transferred to canvas in a manner which fascinates the eye and kindles the imagination, making it a work not only of distinction but of genius. E. A. Walton shows a Border landscape on lines similar to last year, distinguished by the grace of its tree forms and its beautiful procession of colour harmonies. In The Marble Quarry D. Y. Cameron shows strong chiaroscuro and brilliant brushwork—even the prosaic crane is made to subserve an artistic purpose—but it needed not the introduction of diminutive workmen to realise the colossal character of the surroundings.

Charles H. Mackie has won his position as a colourist, and this is the outstanding feature of The Harvest Team. Excellent as it is, however, Mr. Mackie has been too experimental with some sacrifice of harmony. In his Venetian scheme the effects are more subtle and much more convincing.

Springtime — Midlothian, by J. Campbell Mitchell, has great dignity of composition and fine realisation of a plein-air effect, and A. K. Brown upholds his recent academic distinction by one of those reposeful moorland subjects, tender in sentiment and satisfying in its quiet but by no means restricted colour harmonies. J. Lawton Wingate shows two lovely seapieces, and landscapes of note are contributed by J. Campbell Noble, Robert Noble, George Houston, G. A. Gibson, and R. M. G. Coventry.

In the water-colour room the most important work is the large drawing Yarrow, by Thomas Scott. As J. B. Selkirk has been the modern poet of Yarrow so Thomas Scott is its enthusing painter. In this picture he has suffused the vale with golden light till every blade of the "bent sae broon" is bathed in this palpitating ether glow. In his Deuchar Bridge the keynote is the picturesque. R. B. Nisbet, who, by the way, seems now gravitating towards oil painting, contributes a breezy sea-piece, Edwin Alexander a beautiful study of a dog, J. G. Laing an imposing Dutch church interior, and R. W. Allan a finely-lit view of San Francisco at Assisi. James Cadenhead's work, always distinguished, is this year particularly fine, notably his Lochnagar, and Henry Kerr has excellent portraits of Mr. McTaggart and the Auditor of the Court of Session.

The Sculpture section is small, but it includes fine works by Rodin, Sir George Frampton, Alfred Gilbert, Pittendrigh Macgillivray and Percy Portsmouth.

A. EDDINGTON.

The latest acquisitions of the Scottish Modern Arts Association, as recorded in the Second Annual Report issued last month, comprise an oil painting, The Bend of the River, by Mr. R. B. Nisbet; two by Mr. Alexander Roche—a landscape and Pittenweem Harbour; and one by the late Miss Bessie M'Nicol—Baby Crawford; also water-colours by Mr. James Cadenhead, Mr. William Walls and the late Miss Christina Ross. Previous acquisitions during the year were noted in our November number.

"DEUCHAR BRIDGE, YARROW"

BY THOMAS SCOTT, R.S.A.

"WHELK GATHERERS"
BY MARSHALL BROWN

STUDIO-TALK.

(From Our Own Correspondents.)

LONDON.—Mr. Alexander Jamieson, whose picture Fontainebleau, here reproduced, was exhibited at the last Goupil Gallery Salon, has the gift of flooding a canvas with light. A study of many of his canvases brings us to the conclusion that this is his chief gift at present, and it is no inconsiderable one, requiring all the art of the subtlest form of impressionistic painting to obtain that heightening of values which gives the wonderful result he attains.

The Carfax Gallery recently exhibited some statuettes by Mr. Reginald Wells, in which the sculptor has expressed himself with much individuality; showing sympathy for certain aspects of life which, in England at any rate, have, alas! almost escaped commemoration in sculpture. From the work shown on this occasion we reproduce two characteristic pieces.

"MOTHER AND CHILD" (BRONZE) BY REGINALD WELLS
(Exhibited at the Carfax Gallery)

"GIRL SEWING" (TERRA-COTTA) BY REGINALD WELLS
(Exhibited at the Carfax Gallery)

The New Association of Artists' second exhibition at the Goupil Gallery contained many interesting things, notably Mr. T. F. M. Sheard's Under the Arcade, Ghasdaia and Santa Maria della Salute; Mr. S. J. Lamorna Birch's water-colours; Mr. W. Graham Robertson's The Pleached Bower; Mr. Paul Paul's Eventide; Mr. H. Becker's Potato Gatherers; and Mr. T. Robertson's The Harbour, St. Valery-sur-Somme.

Two or three exhibitions of water-colours which have lately taken place should be mentioned. Mr. George Thomson, whose drawings have been on view at the Goupil Gallery, is one of the best of contemporary water-colourists, and excels in such grey pieces as Dole—Stormy Evening. This artist also contributed to the first exhibition of the New Society of Water-Colour Painters at the New Dudley Gallery, where also we saw some interesting work by Sir William Eden, Messrs. T. F. Catchpole, Fred Mayor, A. G. Bell and other artists.

It is by no means an uncommon thing for a British architect to receive a commission from a

"FONTAINEBLEAU"
BY ALEXANDER JAMIESON

(Exhibited at the Goupil Gallery Salon)

SKETCH DESIGN FOR A CHURCH AT BERNDORF, GERMANY, FOR HERR KRUPP ARNOLD MITCHELL, ARCHITECT

foreign country, but in the majority of cases the commission is for a residence of some sort, and very rarely is it for a public edifice. Particular interest therefore attaches to the design of a church illustrated on this page, which Mr. Arnold Mitchell has prepared in fulfilment of a commission entrusted to him by Herr Krupp, of the famous ordnance works. For the walls of the church local brick and stone are to be used, all light in colour, and for the roof bright coloured tiles, the building thus making, with its setting amid rich foliage and background of hills, a pleasing colour group.

The two drawings of Abbeville, in Normandy, by the late Mr. L. J. Wood, R.I., which we reproduce as supplements, are highly interesting both in themselves and as being the work of an artist who never had a lesson in drawing or painting in his life. Mr. Wood, who was born at Islington in 1813, and lived to attain the advanced age of 87, became as a youth acquainted with J. D. Harding, who lent him some drawings to copy; but ere long he turned his eye to nature, Hampstead being his first sketching ground. Attracted to the Continent by the works of David Roberts, R.A., Mr. Wood in 1837 paid his first visit to France, and thereafter made it a practice to spend a part of each year in Normandy, Brittany, Belgium, or on the Rhine, drawing cathedrals and street scenes. Most of the sketches which he made on the spot were in lead pencil, and from these he worked when painting in his studio. Mr. Wood used to exhibit regularly in the old British Institute, and on the cessation of that gallery he devoted himself particularly to water-colours. He was elected Associate of the Royal Institute in 1866 and full member in 1871, resigning membership in 1888.

At the Modern Society of Portrait Painters we

"ABBEVILLE, NORMANDY." FROM
A DRAWING BY L. J. WOOD, R.I.
(Copyright of "The Studio.")

ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED
DATE 01-11-2001 BY 60322 UCBAW/D, R.I.

"ABBEVILLE, NORMANDY." FROM
A DRAWING BY L. J. WOOD, R.I.

(Copyright of "The Studio")

Studio-Talk

had another opportunity of studying Mr. Alexander Jamieson's work. He gives to interior subjects the same sense of atmosphere as to his landscapes, and his art here has the same breadth and vigour, but we miss the necessary quality of sympathy when his touch comes to the intimacies of portrait painting. It was this quality which we missed in so many of the portraits shown at this exhibition. It seemed as if there were many good painters exhibiting portraits who by nature were not essentially intended for portrait work. Still, the whole exhibition was full of brilliant effort. The vitality of Mr. Fergusson's portraits was amazing. His best perhaps was Mlle. Herbert; here his brush had paused in its energetic stroke for other qualiin the exhibition. Two of the most interesting pictures were those of Mr. Gerard Chowne, chiefly on account of the rare quality and originality of his colour schemes and his sense of pictorial design. Mr. Glyn Philpot's work showed some of the most accomplished painting, but his style is not without unpleasant affectations. Mr. Max Bohm's big portrait group was disappointing. It is full of incongruities, assembled apparently for the sake of an arresting, if insincere, effect. Mr. G. F. Kelly's Man with a Cigarette must be accounted one of the best achievements in the rooms. Mr. Sholto Douglas experimented perhaps beyond his powers, but in A Day in June he secured a lively and expressive rendering of the faces; just the qualities which Mr. David Neave missed, for his success with accessories seems to beguile his brush away from the sitters.

Of etchings there have been notable exhibitions at Messrs. James Connell & Sons' and Mr. R. Gutekunst's. At the Galleries of the former such eminent engravers as Messrs. Affleck, Synge, B  jot and others made a very interesting display, and at Mr. Gutekunst's the work of two younger men of unusual promise, Mr. D. S. MacLaughlan and Mr. H. Mulready Stone, proved a source of much enjoyment.

It is with great regret at the death of so gifted an artist as Henry Ospovat that we record the exhibition of his work at the Baillie Gallery. It had been arranged for during his lifetime. Mr.

BOOK PLATE BY JESSIE M. KING
(See Glasgow Studio-Talk)

ties to be desired in a portrait besides a feverish sparkle. In Mr. Lambert's large picture, the modelling of the children's limbs, the flesh painting, the treatment of the dress of the seated figure were all done with mastery and dignity, but this dignity of feeling—so rare in art now—was disturbed in this, as in all his canvases, by impressionistic flourishes, the assumption of an air of spontaneity, which can never be made to fit on to work so deliberately carried out, so formally arranged and stylistic in intention. In Mr. Alfred Hayward's portrait of Archibald Leitch, Esq., the figure is literally bathed in atmosphere; and the beautiful painting of black made the portrait one of the most delightful

BOOK PLATE BY JESSIE M. KING
(See Glasgow Studio-Talk)

Studio-Talk

Ospovat always seems to have had some difficulty in discovering a public, though those who remember his book-plates reproduced a few years ago in one of THE STUDIO Special Numbers, and his lively caricatures which appeared in our pages last year, will doubtless have formed some conception of the variety of his talents.

GLASGOW.—Since the middle of February the art of Jessie M. King has been on view at the galleries of Messrs. T. and R. Annan, some forty water-colour and black-and-white drawings proving once again the amazing industry of an artist with a purpose. In all there seems a lingering 'twixt the realms of fact and fancy, for the artist builds her dream castles with architectural exactitude, and into the stone and lime of a quaint, interesting, old east country hamlet puts a world of poetic feeling. The extreme delicacy of the water-colours destines them for a specially sympathetic environment, an art, in itself, to which too little consideration is given. When the palette is charged with but few colours it is more likely to produce harmony, and this is one of the striking results in the score of dainty water-colours, with clever variations on the Japanese-Whistlerian combination, blue and grey. Of special interest were The Little Grave, with youthful mourner and chill, bare, wintry setting, so eloquent of a mute distress; Wee Willie Winkie, on the borders of dreamland, with birds like cloudlets fluttering around his haloed head; The Hill Song, a charming blending of bird and blossom and dainty maiden; while The Spell, The Shepherdess, The Child by the Sea Shore, The Haven, and others, had each an individual beauty of line and charm of colour.

But in spite of her new affection for colour it is in black-and-white that Miss King continues to make her most direct appeal, and some of the sketches of dear old Culross, of comparatively little-known Kirkcudbright, and of that imaginary land in which she still wanders lovingly, are inimitable in her own particular medium. The three drawings reproduced are characteristic of the variety and interest crowded into the twenty-eight pen drawings. Cannon's Close is typical of an old style of Scottish building lingering in the southern districts of the country. The Workshop in Kirkcudbright is quite a new departure, more strictly confined to fact than a keenly imaginative artist would lead one to expect. The whole atmosphere suggests the village carpenter's shop, with benches; hanging tools on roughly built walls, pierced with small deeply set windows; and overhead the picturesque roof; all with unfailing fidelity, with fine perspective, and clever light and shade effect. The Castle of Jaime, a turreted castle set on the ledge of a yawning, imaginary abyss, is a pretty fancy derived

"CANNON'S CLOSE" FROM A DRAWING BY JESSIE M. KING

"A WORKSHOP IN KIRKCUDBRIGHT" FROM A DRAWING BY JESSIE M. KING

"THE CASTLE OF JAIME." FROM A PEN DRAWING BY JESSIE M. KING

from Chaucer; it is rich in imagery and touched with the most exquisite delicacy. The two book-plates (page 147) are interesting too, but of a somewhat unwonted kind.

J. T.

PARIS.—At the close of the exhibition which has been held of works of art purchased during the past year by the State, the Luxembourg Museum enters into possession of several important works, and amongst them of the picture by M. René Prinnet, which we here reproduce. M. Prinnet, who has rather an affection for paintings of small dimensions, occasionally does work on a larger scale. The picture I speak of will, I believe, be counted as one of his best paintings, on account of the simplicity of the attitudes of the figures, the fine and restrained technique, and the broad and warm colouring. The work is entitled simply A Portrait Group, yet it is interesting to note that the figure on the left is a portrait of M. Saglio, a member of the Institut, formerly Director of the Museum at Cluny, whose work in the field of French archæology is held in very high estimation.

The Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts has just re-elected its President. M. Roll having announced his intention of not standing again, speculation was already rife as to whether M. Besnard or M. Rodin would be chosen, when at the last moment, yielding to the earnest entreaties of the Société Nationale, he accepted the Presidency for 1909, after a unanimous re-election.

At the Gallery of the Artistes Modernes, the group of women artists entitled the "Quelques" has this year again had a most interesting exhibition, and one infinitely superior to those of the two other societies of women artists, which are with few exceptions almost always mediocre. Here one saw with pleasure the portraits, so full of life, by Mme. de Boznanska, and the excellent flower studies, so discreet and restrained, by Mme. Duhem and Mme. Devolvé. Mme. Duranton also showed some flower pieces, but more luminous. Mlle. Florence Esté devoted herself as usual to the landscapes, in which her affinity with the Japanese is always apparent. Finally, the most remarkable personality of this

PORTRAIT GROUP

(Bought by the Luxembourg Museum)

BY R. X. PRINET

"LES ARDENNES" (ETCHING)

BY MARC HENRY MEUNIER

exhibition is Madame Charlotte Besnard, who is certainly one of the great sculptors of the day.

Marc Henry Meunier has been at last made known to the Parisian public, by a very beautiful series of etchings which were shown at Dewambez's Gallery some little while ago. He was already appreciated and liked by all who pride themselves on keeping in touch with the work that is being done in this field of art to-day, on account of his very deep knowledge of his métier. Born at Brussels in 1873, he was at an early age initiated into all the secrets of the art by his father, himself a well-known engraver; he also—and I congratulate him upon this—came under the influence of his uncle, the illustrious sculptor, Constantin Meunier. He excels in all the processes of engraving, in soft ground, aquatint, dry-point, and shows himself in all his plates attracted by problems of colour. What makes his work so particularly attractive to me, is that it reflects with fidelity all the aspects of one country. Meunier is, so to say, rooted in the rugged region of the Ardennes, whose arid country, vast forests of pines, swift flowing rivers rushing over their beds cut deep in the slate rock, are all of such deep character. Certain of his plates are among the finest productions of contemporary engraving, equally on account of their excellent technique and for the deep sentiment of nature that they reveal to us.

For some time there has been in Paris a discussion as to the possibility of organising here an Exhibition of American Art, and the idea is beginning to take form under the patronage of the "Society of American Art Collectors"; it has been decided to hold the exhibition in Paris during July, and Senator Clarke has been entrusted with the arrangements, and also with the organisation of the show in London. As the salons are over on the 30th June, it is not impossible that the Grand Palais will be placed at the disposal of the American Painters.

In the admirably arranged Trotti Gallery there has been an interesting exhibition of works of the

"DANS LES ARDENNES" (ETCHING)
BY MARC HENRY MEUNIER

Italian School, and notably of three remarkable portraits, one by Titian, the two others by Moroni. Sebastiano del Piombo, Francesco Cossa, Botticelli, Tiepolo, Canaletto and Guardi were all equally well represented in an interesting manner. I was less taken with the large painting Venus and Adonis, attributed in the catalogue to Tintoretto.

At Dewambez's there was held recently an exhibition called simply "A Group of Artists," a most interesting assembly, where the most diverse talents were represented. I noticed here, in particular, the beautiful water-colours of M. Jeanès, the pictures of M. Adler, and three very fine portraits by M. Caro-Delville, quite unequalled in their restraint, sincerity and air of distinction.

In my notes last month I referred, in connection with the exhibition of the Painter-Lithographers at the Dewambez galleries, to some admirable lithographs in colour by M. Lucien Monod. Readers of THE STUDIO will, I am sure, be interested to see the accompanying reproduction of one of these charming drawings of his. H. F.

BERLIN.—Frau Erda Wiese, whose embroideries are illustrated on this page, was one of the exhibitors at the last "Künstlerinnenmesse," and it was her first appearance at this annual display of work by lady artists. Her work shows a thorough knowledge of old techniques as well as an inventive sense. She boldly translates naturalistic impressions with astonishing likeness into needlework, and a fertile imagination aids her in producing original designs.

The Hohenzollern Kunstgewerbe-Haus originated the idea of the charming exhibition, "Die Dame in Kunst und Mode," which has been one of the events of the present season. The serious aim of this undertaking was an education of taste, and this æsthetic pedagogy was cleverly hidden under a really artistic surface. All the walls of the large building were turned into a select picture-gallery containing mostly contributions from the best interpreters of the elegant modern lady and also of her graphic caricaturists. A set of boudoirs and rooms was ordered from prominent interior decorators like Albin Müller, Alexander Schröder, Paul Troost, Rudolf und Fia Wille, Ernst Friedmann, and others, and served for a display of exquisite articles of modern dress. The style of the bazaar was strictly avoided by a superior skill of outlay. Many high-class firms and private owners, also the Empress and the Crown Princess, contributed to this exhibition, whither the upper classes of the capital came in crowds. The difficulty was to combine the unlike domains of high art, applied art, and fashion; but the superior skill of Messrs. Friedmann and Weber, and their excellent assistant, Dr. Paul Kraemer, successfully extracted harmony from the cacophony of such conflicting elements.

CUSHION AND COVERLET

DESIGNED AND EXECUTED BY FRAU ERDA WIESE

[illegible]

1. Pharmaceuticals—The pharmaceutical industry is a major source of funding for research in the field of aging. The industry has a vested interest in developing new drugs to treat age-related diseases and conditions.

FROM A LITHOGRAPH BY LUCIEN MONOD.

LADY'S BEDROOM AND TEA-ROOM DESIGNED BY ALEXANDER SCHRÖDER FOR THE "DAME IN KUNST UND MODE" EXHIBITION, BERLIN

Studio-Talk

The winter exhibition of the Secession was entirely dedicated to the arts of the draughtsman. As the gentle art of the pencil has been treated rather as a stepchild by modern impressionism such an undertaking was to be heartily welcomed. Much good work was hung, but also many insignificant and superficial exhibits, so that the study of this too comprehensive show threatened confusion. A retrospective section dedicated to the portraits and animal-drawings of Franz Krüger recalled the exactness and elegance of artistic work of Old Berlin under King Frederick William IV. Present-day spirit was best represented by Secession leaders like Liebermann, Slevogt, Corinth, Hübener and their various standard-bearers, whilst draughtsmen like Kalkreuth, Baluschek, R. E. Weiss, Orlik, Bischof-Kulm and Klein-Diepo'd stood up in their diverse characters for the gospel of finish. A life-size coloured portrait by Gertrud von Kunowski became by rhythmical proportions and rigour of contour the best pleader for her husband's high-minded revivalism of old-master principles. Humorists like Wilke, Thöny, Feldbauer and Reznizek, and caricaturists like Gulbranson, Brandt, Behmer, Strathmann, Feininger, Hablik and Stern, showed fecundity in these domains and fascinated all by individual cleverness. There was much in method and spirit that called to mind Lautrec, Paul, Busch and Beardsley, but there was also a good deal of home-grown originality. L. von Hofmann failed in attempts to assume an amusing physiognomy. A collection of small works of sculpture produced welcome variety. Mendes da Costa's veracious Dutch market-types attracted much notice, and also Barlach, with his strange groups and single figures of Mongolian peasants and beggars, whose sluggish and crouching, yet pagoda-like attitude liken them to amphibious creatures. Dr. Lobach again evinced his penetrating faculty in some excellent portrait-heads.

At the Salon Schulte one is forcibly reminded of the over-production of our time by its constant change of programme. Yet it must be owned that this gallery has always valuable materials to offer. We derived real pleasure from Max Thedy of Weimar, who studies nature so seriously and paints so "old-master" like, that names like Altdorfer, De Hoogh, Vermeer, occasionally even Ribera, are recalled quite naturally. His Munich training under Löfftz is still so strong upon him that, in spite of its splendid qualities, his art will always be ranged with a past period. Walter Geffcken, from Munich, is one of the younger artists whose new

PORTRAIT

(Künstlergenossenschaft, Vienna)

BY VICTOR SCHARF

PORTRAIT OF HEBR M. R.

(Künstlergenossenschaft, Vienna)

BY NICOLAUS SCHATTENSTEIN

works always stir speculation as to future productions. Pictorial qualities and refined taste distinguish him and suggest a thorough Parisian schooling. The personalities of two new-comers, Ernst Kropp and Joachim von Bülow, impressed themselves as disciples of the Manet school. Frida Menshausen-Labriola is strengthening her position as one of the most commendable interpreters of female charm by some life-size pastel portraits, and Richard Eschke worthily sustains his father's fame in landscape painting.

Emil Orlik is such a fertile producer that the whole Salon Gurlitt was filled with his new works. This time it was the painter and not the graphic artist who appeared before us. We studied his portraits and landscapes, his Japanese scenes, bits from real life and still life, his designs for tapestries, for the stage, the contributions that touch the domain of applied arts, and those which are applied art pure and simple, and we experienced a variety of feelings. Respect for thoroughness, delight in refinement and originality, were paramount impressions. We enjoyed the colourist, the draughtsman, the naturalist, the imaginative artist who occasionally even engenders emotion. The pathetic note is sounded when he composes gigantic scenes, The Mountain Lake, The Waterfall, in strong summarising colour-spots for textile designs, and even in works of pure craftsmanship, when composing lacquer pictures like Korin, he can attain such effects. But enjoyment in mere cleverness generally prevails. As Orlik's versatility is always coupled with reliability and distinction, we can be thankful that such a master belongs to the staff of Berlin art-teachers. J. J.

VIENNA. — Though the recent Winter exhibition at the Künstlerhaus showed little variation in the methods of arrangement, it was nevertheless of interest because of the groups of rising young artists whose works made an attractive display. As usual the chief interest centred in the portrait-painters, Rauchinger,

"BEIM HEURIGEN." OIL PAINTING
BY FRANZ WINDHAGER

"THE BLACK HULL" (CARVED EBONY)

BY FRANZ ZELEZNY

Joanowitsch, Pochwalski, Adams, von Ferraris, Jehudo Eppstein, Schattenstein, Scharf, Krausz, Walter Schiff and others. Nicolaus Schattenstein's portrait of Herr M. R. (p. 159) deservedly won warm praise both from laymen and brother artists, among them Herr von Angeli, the president of the Genossenschaft. Its chief merit lies in the fact of its absolute simplicity in arrangement and its harmonious colouring, as also in the intimate understanding of his sitter. The same artist's picture of the little Baroness von G. is a charming and dainty rendering of child life. W. Victor Krausz was at his best in his portrait of Frau Prof. Göbel, as also in another rendering of Miss Thompson, whose portrait by this artist was lately reproduced in THE STUDIO. Victor Scharf's portrait of an old lady (p. 158) breathes an old-world spirit which is fast vanishing with the march of civilisation. John Quincey Adams' portrait of Fräulein Marberg as Iolanthe in the "Teufel" is at once a beautiful bit of colouring and an excellent portrait. The warm blue mantle in which the actress is enveloped admirably contrasts with the grey chinchilla bordering it and the fine rosy flesh tones of the neck and face. His double portrait of a lady and gentleman in riding dress, destined to occupy a niche in a wall, is daring in treatment, and though the portraits are excellent the drawing of the horse in the background is not wholly satisfactory. Arthur von Ferraris was successful in his Study of a Lady and Portrait of a Child, the latter attractive in its simplicity of treatment and colour contrasts. Paul Joanowitsch also exhibited some good portraits, notably one of a lady in a pale-green evening dress. K. Pochwalski's portrait of a Polish gentleman belongs to the artist's best work.

Among the landscape painters Rudolf Quittner was represented by two characteristic pictures full of poetic beauty. M. Suppantischitsch knows his Austria well and seeks his motives in her rich scenery, and the same with Ferdinand Brunner. Hans Ranzoni showed some lovely bits of landscape which prove that this artist has not lost his cunning. Eduard Ameseder, Raimund Germela, E. Baschny, J. Nep Geller, Frau Tina Blau, J. Jungwirth, Frau Florian Wiesinger, Max von Poosch and Adolf Schwarz were well represented, as also Eduard Zetsche, whose bits of landscape have their personal touch and are

MARBLE BUST

BY ALBERT SCHLOSS

INTERIOR OF DALMATIAN ART EXHIBITION AT SPALATO

besides of a good quality. Among the genre painters a new one, Franz Windhager, of whom much may be hoped, made his first entrance before the Vienna public; his one picture Beim Heurigen is a breezy vista of life in the Vienna forests, and is well painted. O. Ružička exhibited some of his scenes from Moravia. Otto Herschel's lovely old-world studies of delicate draperies and subtle harmonies are always welcome. His Mother and Daughter and the half-nude figure of a young girl seen through a looking-glass showed marked advance on his previous work. Fräulein Elsa Eder's Group of Asaleas and Fräulein E. Laske's Study in Oils are also worthy of mention.

In the plastic section, place must first be given to the guests, De Bremaecker (Brussels), Adele Paasch and Josef Limburg of Berlin, who all showed interesting work. Paul E. Fiedler's bust of the composer Béla Laszky; Albert Schloss's bust of a child; Melanie von Horsetzky's bust of a young lady; and Hugo Taglang's bust of a child were other items of interest. Fritz Weghaupt's porcelain figure of the Emperor, seated, is another tribute to the progress in the art of Vienna ceramic making. F. Gornik showed some excellent bronzes. A strong and vigorous piece of work was F. Zelezny's carved ebony figure of a steer; and some excellent medals were shown by Hans Schaefer. A. S. L.

S PALATO, DALMATIA.—At the close of last year was held the first Dalmatian Art Exhibition. All Dalmatian artists, no matter where they might be living, took part in it, and in spite of the early scepticism felt as to the success of the venture, everybody was delighted with the display, which met with unstinted praise and applause. The Ministerium für Kultus und Unterricht in Vienna, the Governor of Dalmatia, and many private persons purchased the exhibited works of art. From this point of view the success could hardly have been better; nor was the artistic success a trifling one. Bukovač, Vidović, Meštrović, Dešković were represented by works which would

"THE OLD CHURCH"

BY EMANUEL VIDOVIĆ

Studio-Talk

"ICARUS"

BY VLAHO BUKOVAC

do credit to any exhibition. Besides that we had the opportunity of making the acquaintance of some new men whose works show much more than mere promise, as, for instance, Rosandić, Rački and Krainer. For this reason the second Dalmatian Art Exhibition, which is to take place in two years, is looked forward to with great hopes, for we are certain that in the meantime the number of really good and mature Dalmatian artists will have largely increased.

Plastic art was in this exhibition very well represented. Its leading representative is Ivan Meštrović, who is now living in Paris. He is the most significant artistic force not only amongst the Croats, but among all South Slavonian artists in general. His sculptures exhibited in the "Secession" in Vienna have been a great success. Lofty in feeling, daring in his motives, and deep in conception—such are the characteristics of this artist. Here in Spalato he is already known by one of his collective exhibitions, which took place some years ago, and by the monument to the Croatian poet, Luka Botić, of this place. The works he exhibited on this occasion were all new. The clou of the exhibition was his group—Laokoon mojih dana (Laokoon of my Days)—a mature woman of voluptuous form embracing an old man, seated, whom she grips with her teeth underneath the shoulder. The robust muscles of the woman betray the strength of a raging passion, while the wry face of the old man bears an expression of pain. The Bard of my People shows us a blind "guslar" guided by a boy, the contrast between old age and youth being very effective. The head of the "guslar" expresses the pain of his own misfortune, combined with the sorrow he feels for the misery of his people, which is the burden of his song. Though none of the other sculptors is to be compared with Meštrović, nearly all of them exhibited works of merit. Very well known and popular is Ivan Rendić, who started his artistic work at a time when such a thing as Croatian art did not yet exist. His sculptures are of an academic type mostly, but some of them are excellently

"THE MUSICIAN"

BY TOMA ROSANDIĆ

Studio-Talk

"THE BOSNIAN"

BY BRANISLAV DEŠKOVIĆ

modelled. Dubravka betrays a true plastic perception; Meditation is very graceful and noble; the lower part of the Pietà is exquisite, particularly the head and shoulder of the dead Christ. Branislav Dešković's mastership in animal sculpture was proved by his works The Draught Horse, The Ass, and The Dog. Two Old Ones is the best one of all his compositions, and has been exhibited in the "Salon" of Paris, where it gained much approbation. An artist from whom in the future one may look for good things is Toma Rosandić. Some of his works, for instance Remorse and Portrait of an Old Man, are influenced by Meštrović, to be sure, but in others he follows the bent of his own mind. A Dalmatian Peasant-woman, by Bruno Bersa—a pleasant, graceful head—and Portrait of a Musician, by T. Duković, are both of them works worth mentioning.

Among the painters I must name first of all Vlaho Bukovač, a professor at the Academy of Arts in Prague. He exhibited about fifteen pictures, all of them of the best artistic quality. Bukovač is a painter of more than ordinary ability, and his works have been seen in many foreign exhibitions. He is excellent as a portrait-painter. His Portrait of Mrs. B., one of the best he showed here, is a work full of animation and freshness, besides being very effective in colour. A charming and graceful reminiscence of the painter's family life was given in his picture called My Nest. Two well-painted nudes were also among his contributions—one called The Hot Bath being, perhaps, the finest bit of painting he has done so far. I liked his Dante triptych much less than his diptych Icarus, the latter an admirable achievement. Emanuel Vidović, one of the most talented

"VILLA MEDICI, ROME"

BY LUCY S. CONANT

"PROUT'S NECK, MAINE"

BY WINSLOW HOMER

artists represented at the exhibition, exhibited a few of his most recent works, showing considerable advance in executive power on his earlier works. His painting is marked by poetic feeling with sometimes a trace of naïveté. A good example of it is his Old Church, harmonious in composition and colour. Celestin Medović is portraitist, historic genre and landscape painter, and his exceptional virtuosity is seen in nearly everything he essays. His landscapes are painted with great veracity. Of his figure subjects, St. Francis of Assisi, one of the things he showed at this exhibition, is one of his best, but in portraiture he is less distinguished, the best example of this branch of his work being A Lady with Diadem, but even that reminded one of Bukovać. Mirko Rački showed a series of etchings disclosing considerable power of invention. In his paintings, interest centres in the vigour and novelty of his perception rather than in the colour. Paško Vučetić, a native of Spalato but now living in Belgrade, also showed some good portraits, but in general he seems to be much influenced by Stuck. A young painter of much ability is N. Marinković, whose portrait of the philosopher Petrić speaks well for his future.

MILAN BEGOVIĆ.

PHILADELPHIA.—The sixth annual exhibition of the Philadelphia Water Color Club at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts was quite equal in interest and quality of the work shown to any that this thoroughly modern group of artists has held. The jury of selection showed plainly that they were not bound by any narrow view of what constitutes true artistic merit, and certainly deserve great credit for the way in which they discharged their difficult duty. The pictures were hung on the walls so spaced as to be most effective and not in any way suggestive of clash of colour or of tone. It must be said, however, that some of the groups of works would have been less interesting to the layman than to the painter, such, for example, as Mr. Maurice Prendergast's contributions, indefinite as they are in drawing, experimental in colour. Much in the same category could be placed M. Auguste Rodin's group of forty-six drawings, many of which must be quite meaningless to the average visitor to the gallery not interested in the preliminary work that artists of M. Rodin's standing find so necessary and which leaves so much for the imagination to complete. They are apparently sketches of partly evolved motifs made for his own use, and intelligible only to him as notes of ideas finding final embodiment in marble.

Studio-Talk

The Catalogue contained the names of an unusual number of women, and they contributed some of the best work in the collection. The work of Miss Alice Schille, Two Children, and a number of sketches made in Brittany should be especially mentioned. The first-mentioned picture is a work expressive of tender sentiment as regards subject and very successful as an example of pure water-colour unaided by the use of opaque pigment. Miss Violet Oakley's sketches of the Children of Dr. George Woodward reflect credit on her ability to depict the character of the child in art. Miss Elizabeth Shippen Green exhibited a group of portraits of the Children of Owen Wister, Esq., simple and unpretentious in pose and treatment. Miss Lucy Conant's pictures of the Gardens of Famous Roman Palaces deserve particular notice. A series of original drawings by Maxfield Parrish, depicting scenes from "Wonder Tales of Greek Mythology," and another series of illustrations for the "Arabian Nights Entertainments" lent by "Collier's Weekly," showed wonderful wealth of imagery combined with masterful skill in drawing. Thornton Oakley's original illustrations of Scenes about the Docks and Blast Furnaces were extremely interesting and served to show the picturesque side of our industrial activity.

The irresistible onward rush of a great wave at Prout's Neck, Maine, rendered by Winslow Homer in a direct and forceful handling of simple washes of colour, has resulted in a refreshing work suggestive of the mighty power and movement of the ocean. Henry B. Snell, in a Cornish Fishing Cove, showed the sure touch of the well-trained brush and gave us true and convincing results. Excellent each in his own way are J. Henry Moser's September Haze, and A Long Island Beach, by W. L. Lathrop. Harold B. Warren's West Mountain, Mt. Desert, is conscientious and careful in painting and truthful in effect. A fine piece of still life painting was shown by Joseph Lindon Smith in A Roman Vase. The Beck Prize was

"MARKET, VERONA, EARLY MORNING"

BY ALEXANDER ROBINSON

Art School Notes

SKETCH OF CHARLES WOODWARD BY VIOLET OAKLEY

awarded to Maxfield Parrish for his work, Landing of the Brazen Boatman.

E. C.

ART SCHOOL NOTES.

LONDON.—An attractive exhibition was held last month at the South London Art Gallery of work executed by students of the Camberwell School of Arts and Crafts. The exhibition, which was arranged principally in the Ruskin room of the Art Gallery (which adjoins the Camberwell School), illustrated by the variety of its contents the broad field of industries covered by the school's curriculum. Nothing was more interesting than the specimens of pottery arranged in the centre of the Ruskin room, especially those contributed jointly by Mr. A. and Mr. H. Hopkins. These were described as "the first outcome of experiments in the chemistry of glazes and their use in art in their application to good thrown earthenware shapes," and the best of them were charming in their grace of form and delicacy of colour. If the two young potters can preserve in the further developments of their craft the simplicity of these early efforts there should be a considerable demand for their work. Needlework figured largely in the exhibition, and there was a good collection of bookbindings, notably by Mr. H. G. Adams, Mr. R. Pearce, Mr. H. H. Cushion, and Mr. R. Venner. Printing, plastering, wood-carving, gilding, jewellery, lettering, cabinet-making, costume drawing and design, stained glass and lithography are but a few of the subjects taught in the school over which Mr. W. B. Dalton presides, and all of these were well represented. Good book illustration and other black-and-white work were shown by Mr. A. S. Hayes and Mr. J. Jaggs, and by a young Spanish student, Mr. R. Montes. One of the best of the water-colours was a study of an old woman's head by Mr. J. Turner. Painting the figure in oils is a new development at Camberwell, but there was promise in some of the sincere and careful studies from life shown in the exhibition of carpenters at work at the bench. School of Art Scholarships have been awarded at Camberwell by the London County Council to Alfred S. Hayes, Mabel D. Johnson, Madeleine Kings-Lynne, William G. Whitaker, Constance A. Cocksedge, Isabel E. Drake, Emily E. Mullins, Daisy S. Newton, Jessie M. Nicholson, Margaret D. Nicholson, and Ruth Thurley with extensions for two years to Millicent Coleman and Lilian C. Fox. In the last National Competition silver medals were gained by Gertrude Coleman and Guy Miller, and bronze medals by Evelyn Bousfield, Margaret L. Greig, James H. Hogan, Arthur Langford, Maude Rogers, Hilda Russell and Daisy V. Wilks.

The prizes given by the Society of Arts to the students of the Artistic Crafts Department of the Northampton Polytechnic Institute, Camberwell, were awarded last month to Mr. John Allan and Mr. W. W. Meedy. The special prizes offered on the same occasion to the Artistic Crafts students by the Worshipful Company of Skinners were taken by Mr. Alfred J. Barnes and Mr. Cyril Bailey.

A curious indication of the remarkable development in England of the practice of studying from the living model was seen last month in the reading before the Architectural Association Debating Society of a paper by Mr. E. Constable Alston on "Drawing from the Life, its Value to Architects." A generation or two ago no artist would have thought of suggesting that it could be necessary or advantageous for architects at large to draw from the life, and architects who desired to do so would have found it difficult to discover a school in which to work. To-day, when life classes exist everywhere, both in London and in the provinces, it seems strange that there was a time, within the memory of artists still among us, when the Curator of the Living Model Academy in Upper St. Martin's Lane claimed that his institution was the only school in England, except that of the Royal Academy, in which drawing and painting from the life could be practised. It was in 1841 that this assertion was made, and it was probably not far from the truth, for in a great city like Manchester there was no attempt to institute a life class until 1845. "The want of such a class," said the promoters of the scheme, "has long been felt by the students and artists of this town as an insuperable bar to professional advancement." Even at the Royal Academy as recently as 1863 there was no drawing or painting from the nude in the day classes, where only draped models sat for three hours a day, three times a week. South Kensington (the Royal College of Art) had by that time arrived at life classes, but no female figure models were allowed to pose. It is worth remarking in this connection that, according to Wilkie, who visited the Beaux Arts in Paris in 1814, no women at that time ever sat in the life classes at the principal art school of France.

Art School Notes

The architect of 1841 who was desirous of drawing from the life would probably have found it difficult to obtain admission to the Living Model Academy. Such a thing was then unknown as a class available to any draughtsman who could pay a fee for a month or a term, and no one could enter London's only open life school until he had been proposed and seconded by members and had survived the ensuing ballot. The Living Model Academy, which was the resort of most of the younger artists of the time who could gain admission, and at which Etty was for years a constant attendant at such times as the Royal Academy life classes were shut, was founded about 1825. The schools of the Royal Academy, then at Somerset House, occupied the rooms in which the annual exhibition was held, and the life and other classes were therefore closed for five months in the year. This inordinately long vacation induced some of the more industrious students to start an outside life class, at first in a room adjoining Temple Bar, which developed later into the Living Model Academy. The foundation of this institution brought about a welcome improvement in the supply and quality of artists' models. They were scarce and dear in the early years of the eighteenth century, when at the Royal Academy one or two of the porters posed regularly for the male figure, and there were but few openings for outsiders. One of these porters was the well-known Sam Strowger, whose name is familiar to the readers of Leslie's "Life of Constable." Strowger, who came from the same part of Suffolk as Constable, was for years the "man-model" of the Royal Academy. He served in the Army until his discharge was purchased by the Academy Council.

Mr. W. Goscombe John, the newly elected Academician, will be the Visitor for April at the Royal Academy School of Sculpture. In the same month Mr. E. J. Gregory will visit the School

DESIGN FOR A CHRISTMAS CARD
(L.C.C. School of Art, Westminster)

BY MISS M. TRINDER

Reviews and Notices

of Drawing and Mr. Seymour Lucas the School of Painting. The Visitor in the School of Architecture will be Mr. T. G. Jackson.

Westminster School of Art has made rapid progress under Mr. Mouat Loudan, the director, since its installation a year ago in the new building provided by the London County Council in Vincent Square. At the last sketch club quarterly "at home," examples of the students' work were exhibited, and the quality of some of the painting and modelling from the life was uncommonly good. The studies were shown in competition for local prizes, and these were awarded to Miss Haig and Miss Kay for modelling from the life, with honourable mentions for decorative modelling to Mr. F. W. Hurdman (design for an overdoor to a music-room) and to Mr. John Wadley. The first prize for painting from the life was given to Miss U. W. A. Parkes for a capable full-length study, the second to Miss M. Trinder, and the third to Miss B. S. Pedder, who also won the prize for drawing with a group of studies, Mr. E. G. Stay winning the second prize, and honourable mention being given to Miss Parkes. In the design competition Miss Davison was first and Miss Lancaster second. Miss L. Lancaster, who was honourably mentioned for design, was awarded the sketch club quarterly prize. Among the landscapes, the water-colours by Miss Trinder, simply and directly painted, attracted attention. Miss Trinder's contributions also included the interesting design for a Christmas card now reproduced.

W. T. W.

REVIEWS AND NOTICES.

A History of British Water-Colour Painting. By H. M. CUNDALL, I.S.O., F.S.A. (London: John Murray.) 21s. net.—It is somewhat strange that, in spite of the multiplication of art monographs during the last twenty years, no complete history of water-colour painting should hitherto have appeared; but the gap has now been to a great extent filled by the appearance of Mr. Cundall's new volume with its numerous excellent reproductions of typical work done in England from the sixteenth century to the present day, including early miniatures and examples of water-colours by Sandby, Wheatley, Cozens, Grobin, Constable, Turner, Bonington, Cotman, Cattermole, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Millais, Fred Walker, Fred Tayler, Arthur Melville, Whistler, and many other artists of note. The book contains a vast amount of carefully collected information that will be of great use to the future historian, the actual text being supplemented by appendices giving brief biographical notices, alphabetically arranged, of the chief exponents of the art under notice, and lists of the past and present members of the more important London societies, to which—the title of the compilation being British, not English, Water-Colour Painting—those of the principal Scotch and Irish associations should certainly have been added. Beginning with an interesting account of miniature painting, in which he gives due credit to the Irish monks who introduced the art into Northumbria, Mr. Cundall passes on to consider what he aptly calls the Topographical Draughtsmen, amongst whom he places the Dutchman, Pieters Tillemans, as one of the first to paint in water-colours in England; William Tavener, Alexander Cozens, and the two Sandbys; and he notes that although the pioneers of landscape painting, Wilson, Gainsborough, and Constable, worked chiefly in oils, sketches in water-colour from their hands have been preserved, proving that had they wished to do so they could have achieved excellent results in the less familiar medium. In the latter portion of the book the artists are grouped according to the societies to which they belonged, full details of which are given.

Ancient Tales and Folklore of Japan. By RICHARD GORDON SMITH. (London: A. & C. Black.) 20s. net.—The author tells us in the preface to this work that the stories which are gathered together therein were told to him during his nine years' residence in Japan, by fishermen, farmers, priests and others with whom he was in continual association. Many of them are new to Eastern readers, and most of them will be found interesting to students of folklore and lovers of old-world myths. The illustrations, which are reproduced in colours, are not good from either an Eastern or a Western point of view, as, like so many drawings that are produced in Japan at the present day, they exhibit an admixture of the two styles, entirely destructive of the essential charm which rightly belongs to each when undefiled by contamination with the other.

Old Lace: A Handbook for Collectors. By M. JOURDAIN. (London: B. T. Batsford.) 10s. 6d. net.—This latest addition to the already copious literature on old lace has several distinctive merits of its own, the chief being the care with which it traces the influence of contemporary art and design upon the development of lace and that of different countries and schools on each other, and the arrangement in chronological order of the excellent illustrations (which number several hundred), enabling the student readily to follow each step in the evolution of the various styles. For the rest the book shows a very true appreciation of the exquisite beauty of the delicate craft, as well as a most intimate acquaintance with the history of the development of needle point and bobbin lace from the early 16th century to the present day. Copious notes giving the names of the authorities consulted, and a glossary of technical terms, add to the value of the volume.

Reviews and Notices

D. Y. Cameron's Etchings. With an Introductory Essay by FRANK RINDER. (Edinburgh: Otto Schulze & Co.) 12s. 6d. net; éd. de luxe, £1 11s. 6d.—It is about twenty years since Mr. Cameron, originally destined for a mercantile calling, began to etch, and in the interval he has been steadily forging ahead, until now he can confidently claim a place in the very front rank of living etchers. The total number of his plates up to the present, as we learn from Mr. Rinder's interesting appreciation, is 220, and of these sixty appear in this volume in the shape of half-tone reproductions. Taken as a whole the reproductions are excellent, and sufficiently near to the artist's proofs to enable one to appreciate their distinctive qualities. Here and there, it is true, the printer has hardly done justice to the subject, and this we think it is to some extent the case with the two representing what many regard as the artist's greatest achievements in landscape and architecture respectively, viz., The Meuse and The Five Sisters of York, the latter "an image of prayer ascending heavenward on the wings of light," to quote Mr. Rinder's expressive characterization, and both, as he tells us, "the issue of an infinite series of rejections." While we can endorse his advice to study Mr. Cameron's works directly, it should be borne in mind that, owing to the extremely small number of his proofs in existence and to the eagerness with which they are sought by collectors, very few people have an opportunity of doing this, and have therefore to be content with process reproductions, but for which the artist's work as an etcher would be utterly unknown to many.

Stained Glass Tours in France. By CHARLES HITCHCOCK SHERRILL. (London: John Lane.) 6s. net.—Mr. Sherrill has set himself the task of providing an answer to the question—"Where does one find good stained glass in France, and how can it most conveniently be seen?"—and has very successfully accomplished his purpose. Though obviously intended to be a guide-book, it contains so much that is interesting even to those who are not fortunate in seeing the beautiful windows that the author describes, that it should be in the hands of every one who is at all susceptible to the charm of stained glass. Mr. Sherrill has divided his subject into three parts, dealing first in each case with the glass of a particular period, and following this with a chapter describing the tours he recommends the reader to undertake in order to see the best examples extant. At the end of the book he gives itineraries of all the tours, showing the distances, and also the distance of each place mentioned from Paris; and when it is understood that the programme mapped out includes visits to such famous cathedrals and churches as those of Chartres, Bourges, Amiens, Rouen, Rheims, and the Ste. Chapelle at Paris, to mention a few only of the host of places to each of which he devotes a special chapter, some idea may be gathered of the scope and interest of the book.

A Century of Archaeological Discoveries. By Professor A. MICHAELIS. Translated by BETTINA KAHNWEILER. (London: Murray.) 12s. net.—The German language, and the German language of science especially, is not to be counted among the easiest to render into English, and the translator of Professor Michaelis' book is to be congratulated upon her excellent English version of this important work. The book, intended rather to be of service to students than for those who are already deeply versed in the study of archaeology, recapitulates the history of the discoveries and the work undertaken during the last century in all those places of the Old World which have been laboriously compelled to yield up their buried treasure and to add to our store of knowledge of a bygone age. The numerous illustrations have been chosen with a view to their value to English readers, and are excellently reproduced in half-tone.

Fairbairn's Book of Crests of the Families of Great Britain and Ireland. 4th ed., revised and enlarged. (London and Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack.) 2 vols., 25s. net.—The publishers of this new and greatly enlarged edition of "Fairbairn" are to be warmly commended for the enterprise they have shown in undertaking this re-issue, and especially in bringing it within the reach of a much larger public by reducing the price from three guineas to little more than a third. As now revised and extended, the work stands unrivalled among books of its class. The list of crests, arranged alphabetically according to surnames, occupies over 600 pages of the first volume and embraces no less than 43,000 entries; the mottoes take up nearly 100 pages at the end, and these are followed by a key by means of which the owner of any given crest may be identified, and a concise glossary of heraldic terms. The second volume is wholly devoted to illustrations, which consist of 314 engraved plates printed on a tinted ground, the number of crests figured thereon amounting altogether to upwards of 4,000, of which 1,330 are entirely new. An exhaustive work of this kind has, of course, a special interest for designers and craftsmen in many branches of industry, and to such we can unreservedly recommend it.

Reviews and Notices

To Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.'s "Westminster" series of technical handbooks a volume by Mr. ARTHUR LOUIS DUTHIE has been added, dealing with Decorative Glass Processes. (6s. net.) The processes treated of by the author, who has had practical experience of them as a designer and executant, are those involved in leaded lights, stained glass, embossing or "etching," brilliant cutting and bevelling, the sand-blast, gilding, silvering, and mosaic. Special chapters are devoted to proprietary and patented processes, and at the outset an account is given of the various kinds of glass employed in the processes described.

In the new issue of The Year's Art, edited by Mr. A. C. R. Carter, and published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. (cloth, 3s. 6d. net), eight of the nine illustrations are views of the art galleries in the Franco-British Exhibition of last year; and Mr. Marion Spielmann contributes a succinct account of the unique display of works gathered together on that occasion. The directory of art workers, one of the many useful features of this carefully edited annual, has been enlarged, and now occupies nearly 200 out of the 600 odd pages of letterpress.

John Smith's Catalogue Raisonné of the Works of the most Eminent Dutch, Flemish, and French Painters, after being out of print for many years and so scarce that as much as £25 or £30 has had to be paid for the set of nine volumes, has been reprinted and issued by Messrs. Sands & Co., of London and Edinburgh, at the price of five guineas net. The text is precisely the same as that of the original issue, the binding and general format of which have also been matched, but the reprint has the advantage of a series of 42 photograph plates distributed throughout the first eight volumes. The comparatively low price at which this important work is now obtainable will doubtless ensure a quick sale of the limited edition which has been printed.

A valuable companion to Smith's Catalogue

Raisonné will be found in certain volumes of the Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, published by the Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt at Stuttgart. In each of the volumes composing this series excellent half-tone reproductions are given of all the known paintings of one or other great master. Thus the volume on Rembrandt, of which the third impression has recently appeared (Mk. 14, cloth), gives in its 643 illustrations (mostly full-page) reproductions of all authenticated paintings of the great Dutch master, together with those by pupils of his on which he is known to have worked, a few that have been lost sight of, and others falsely attributed to him. The volume is prefaced by a carefully written biographical sketch from the pen of Adolf Rosenberg, and at the end, besides a useful series of notes, a list, arranged topographically, is given of present owners of the pictures.

An important work dealing with the history of Viennese porcelain has been issued by the Hof- und Staats-Druckerei in Vienna, under the title of Die Kaiserl. Königl. Wiener Porzellanmanufaktur (Mk. 150). The work is the outcome of an exhibition of Old Viennese Porcelain, held at the Austrian Museum for Art and Industry four years ago, and is illustrated by forty-two very fine plates, including twelve in colour, as well as illustrations interspersed throughout the text, which as regards the first period, before the factory came under the protection of Maria Theresa, has been written by Dr. Braun, director of the Museum at Troppau, while its subsequent history is dealt with by Regierungsrat J. Folnesics, custodian of the Austrian Museum.

Two novelties in fountain pens have been placed on the market by the makers of the famous Waterman Ideal Fountain Pen—one a pen which is self-filling, and the other a pen made especially for travellers, and quite proof against climatic derangements. It is interesting to note that last month was the 25th anniversary of the Waterman "Ideal" pen, for it was on February 12, 1884, that Mr. L. E. Waterman, its inventor, after making a small number, effected his first sale in New York. The universal popularity of the pen is the best tribute to its sterling qualities.

Another anniversary in this year of anniversaries is that of the Carron Company, which dates the beginning of its business career no less than 150 years back. The Company has by the excellence of its manufactures, such as grates, stoves, lavatory fittings, and so forth, gained a wide and well-deserved reputation, both at home and abroad.

The Lay Figure

THE LAY FIGURE: ON GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

"I THINK there is some justification for the assertion which we have heard so often, that artists generally are lacking in real business capacity," said the Art Critic. "At all events, I question whether many of them are good business men."

"Why should they be?" cried the Man with the Red Tie. "They are producers, not retailers, and there is no necessity for them to learn the tricks of trade."

"But the producer must know how to dispose of his productions if he is going to make a living out of them," objected the Critic. "If he has not this knowledge what is the use of his going on producing? In a very short time he will be over-stocked, and then he will become disheartened and lose his efficiency for want of encouragement."

"But if his work is good its merit will always ensure its receiving attention," returned the Man with the Red Tie. "There is no need to push or advertise it; people will seek it out because they want it."

"That is the commonest of all fallacies," broke in the Dealer, "and one which does more than anything else to keep the bulk of artists in poverty. I can speak here from my own experience, and I say emphatically that nothing will sell unless it is properly advertised."

"And as advertisement is the soul of business," laughed the Critic, "the man who refuses to advertise is lacking in business capacity. That is part of my contention. I feel that the artist is too much inclined to spend his life in expectations without doing anything to realise these expectations practically."

"Would you turn him into a mere tradesman?" asked the Man with the Red Tie. "Would you have him adopt the wicked ways of commerce and sink to the level of the shopkeeper?"

"Well, what is he but a tradesman?" retorted the Dealer. "He offers things for sale and he must sell them if he is to live. His wares are subject to the same laws of supply and demand that affect other commodities; why should he claim to occupy a position which allows him to disregard these laws?"

"Because he is an artist," replied the Man with the Red Tie; "and, being an artist, he cannot be expected always to keep his eye on the state of the market. Still less can he be expected to turn out things to suit some momentary fashion."

"I grant you so much," said the Critic, "but it does not follow that because a man should not be constantly studying the market he should never give any attention to the common-sense details of his profession. For want of this attention he is apt to land himself in difficulties which with a little discretion he might have avoided."

"But discretion and business capacity are not the same thing," cried the Man with the Red Tie.

"Oh yes, they are," replied the Critic, "the discreet business man does not frighten away custom by over-pricing his goods, by refusing to show to possible buyers the sort of things they are likely to want, or by insisting that they are mere idiots who do not know their own minds. He does not make the mistake of trying to palm off on them shoddy stuff, but he takes care to display attractively the good things that he has for disposal."

"In fact," broke in the Dealer, "he does everything that the average artist does not do. My complaint against the whole profession is that the artist is an entirely unpractical person to deal with. For instance, I have a client, not too well off, who wants to buy a small picture by a man he fancies; when I go to that man and ask him for something suitable he tells me he hates painting small pictures and that I must have a large one at a large price or go without. My client, of course, goes away and buys something else, a piece of furniture, perhaps, or a bit of old china, but usually not a picture. You see, he wanted that particular man's work, and a thing by another painter would not appeal to him."

"That painter might sell his large picture to someone else," objected the Man with the Red Tie; "your client is not the only buyer in the world."

"Ah! there you prove my contention," cried the Critic. "Artists are always expecting the right buyer to turn up, and they will do nothing to turn expectations into certainties. That is where they prove themselves to be bad business men. When small pictures are in demand they have only large ones in stock; when low-priced things are wanted they have only costly ones to offer. They do not watch the trend of the public taste and try to provide what is likely to be appreciated. Why, the veriest beginner expects to get his hundreds for the large canvases which he, a man with his reputation unmade, puts before the public, and complains that he is misunderstood because other people will not take him at his own valuation. He does not see that the best advertisement he can have is to get his pictures about, even if at first he has to sell them at a sacrifice. Surely this implies a want of business insight." THE LAY FIGURE.

"Have nothing in your houses that you do not know to be useful, or believe to be beautiful."—WILLIAM MORRIS.

The National Society of Home Art and Decoration

The purposes of this society are as follows:

1. To secure the adoption by building contractors, architects and owners of better standards of design and decoration in the average American homes, city, village and country.
2. To urge the study of the principles of home art, architecture and decoration in schools and educational organizations.
3. To take part in the exhibitions of architectural and arts and crafts societies, with a view to the assembling of designs and examples bearing upon the subject.
4. To conduct through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO a department of suggestions to readers and members of the society, and also to conduct an established inquiry department, through which, by publication or personal replies, information bearing in any way upon the subject may be readily secured in so far as expert authorities and careful consideration can supply it.

5. To keep members informed concerning publications and exhibitions, through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO, and the bulletins and publications that the society may be called upon to issue.

6. To cooperate with local clubs and associations in supplying exhibitions, lectures, lantern-slides, etc.

An advisory committee of eminent specialists will shortly be elected, and their services invited in their several capacities.

For information concerning MEMBERSHIP, apply to the Treasurer, Mr. Pendleton Dudley, 34 Pine Street, New York.

A PLEA FOR THE OPEN FIRE-PLACE IN DECORATION

TO REVEL in the charm which lies in an open fire—one's own fire—the luxurious delight of lounging before its glowing embers or sitting in the twilight room with the gleam from the leaping flames touching here and there the polished surfaces of furniture or brass or crystal ornament, is the dream of every incipient house owner. But in the material realization of these dreams, to insure an even temperature and sufficient warmth to the house, other modes of heating must be installed, and as the comfort-loving citizen of the United States demands this, he will, alas! sacrifice beauty to insure it.

Therefore, the installation of hot-water or steam system of direct radiation, which has in the very recent past meant the placing of steam pipes or radiators in a room, secures such provision for health and comfort as the home builder has wisely deemed essential, and where he is a man of modest

By Courtesy of Pierce, Butler & Pierce Mfg. Co.

SOME CLEVER ARCHITECTS HAVE FOUND IT POSSIBLE TO PLACE THE HALL RADIATORS IN THE PANELS OF THE WAINSCOT

A Plea for the Open Fireplace

THE GREAT FIREPLACE IS FLANKED BY RADIATORS SET UNDER EACH WINDOW

means he has allowed it to go at that and endeavored to forget the dream picture of darting flames and glowing embers, and enjoyed the even temperature his radiators assured. Unfortunately, he occasionally compromised with his ideal and added a sham fireplace, its narrow shelf supporting a beetling overmantel of fearful design, the tiny shallow opening holding three aggressively false logs, which on occasion would emit small flickering flames together with overwhelming fumes of gas.

To-day, however, there is a decided tendency toward abolishing imitation and false effects in house building, decoration and furnishing, and the sham affair is left out. A real open fireplace may be put in as one of the decorative features of the room. Regarding it from this viewpoint alone it gives excellent returns for the cost, as it goes far toward supplying the livable and inviting look so desirable in the home. Also the ventilation that the open chimney provides is important, particularly when during the rigors of winter the rooms are comfortably heated by steam or hot water, and in the early spring and late fall it will be found not only a delight but an economy, supplying all the heat necessary in the rooms.

In houses of small cost the simplest style of mantel shelf and the least conspicuous tile or brick (in color or form) to surround it should be selected. Where the arrangement of the rooms of the first floor allow them to be thrown together a single such fireplace will form a decorative adjunct to all of them. This may be placed in the central hall facing the door, or at the end of either the dining-room or living-room which flanks the hall. The location and style of the heaters also used in these rooms are important. A few of the manufacturers of such supplies have awakened to the call of the architect, the decorator and the house owner in providing forms which are less obtrusive and which lend themselves to various methods of disguising these most necessary fixtures.

It is now possible to obtain wall radiators, which though designed primarily for use in offices, public halls, etc., have been found well adapted for residences. These may be used in bay windows and under stairways, and are convenient and efficient. Any number of sections may be connected either horizontally or vertically. Some clever architects have found it quite possible to use these in the wide paneling of the wainscoted room, finishing them in a color exactly matching the tone of the woodwork. Also for semidirect radiation a wall box radiator is made. It is built of cast iron, the opening covered by crossbar lattice, which is not at all conspicuous or objectionable when placed in the woodwork or plaster surface of the wall. Enamels in white and various colors, as well as ebony, are obtainable, so that it is not a difficult matter to match the wall color in the finish for these. These same finishes are applicable to the larger direct radiators and are much to be preferred to the silver and copper paints with which all styles of heaters have so long been unpleasantly identified.

A CHARMING BEDROOM BEAUTIFIED BY THE OPEN FIREPLACE AND MADE COMFORTABLE BY INDIRECT RADIATION

Lenox Porcelain

For the dining-room one finds it difficult to resist the radiator which is furnished with the capacious warming-closet. These may be so placed as to be inconspicuous and the extreme convenience more than offsets the sometime objection to having them visible.

This plea is addressed chiefly to the owner of the moderately priced house, as in those of more elaborate design and costly construction the good architect will unflinchingly avail himself of the decorative possibilities of the chimney piece and open fire. Frequently he will employ the indirect method of heating the rooms with steam or hot water. This method does away entirely with radiators, allowing the heat to enter the room through registers set in the floor or side wall. This permits a perfect control of fresh air as well as the warmed air entering the room. Its cost, however, is about one-third more than that of the direct radiation.

The suggestion for the small house offered above may be followed with results as satisfying in comfort as those to be obtained by the installation of this more costly system. By using at least one open fireplace, and by the careful selection of such styles of radiators as may be best suited to the rooms, giving these a finish harmonizing with the general scheme, one may secure the desired comfort while retaining his ideals, and at no greater expense.

THE New York Society of Ceramic Arts will hold an exhibition in the galleries of the National Arts Club, 119 East 19th Street, New York, from March 24 to April 10.

PORCELAIN MADE IN AMERICA BY ARTHUR V. ROSE

THE English manufacturers have always considered themselves safe and beyond competition in the production of English china, or "bone china," as it is more commonly known, in contradistinction to French, German or Austrian china, which is a hard, or feldspathic, body. But it is, nevertheless, an established fact that "bone china," equal in every respect to the finest of the English makes, is being made here, not experimentally, but as a commercial and artistic success.

This achievement has been acquired by Mr. Walter S. Lenox, of Trenton, N. J., after many years of careful experimenting, fraught with innumerable failures and disappointments, and he has surrounded himself with a staff of the best ceramic chemists, designers, modelers, artists, decorators and gilders, who can compete not only in price with their English cousins, but also with the highest class of decorations, painting and gilding that has hitherto come from the English factories alone. Mr. Lenox has added recently to his up-to-date factory a perfect model "bone-china" plate plant and equipped it with all the latest machinery known to the expert potters of the world, including many important improvements of his own, which places him in a position of competing for the trade which comes from our American millionaires and wealthy families with the best of his foreign competitors.

That this is a fact and not mere idle gossip it may be interesting to our readers to know that he has recently finished several magnificent table services for some of our wealthiest and most prominent people, which compare most favorably with the finest the world can produce, both as to quality and translucency of "paste," transparency and lusciousness of glaze, richness of decoration and perfection of details and design.

PORCELAIN

LENOX WARE

Lenox Porcelain

He has a carefully selected and almost inexhaustible palette of "hard fire" colors, with which he obtains the most marvelous results, not only in the purity and brilliance of the ground colors but in all the delicate colorings for figure, landscape, fruit and flower paintings. This perfection and excellence is largely to be attributed, first, to the superb quality of the glaze; next, to the colors themselves and their perfect agreement with and adaptability to the

PORCELAIN

LENOX WARE

PORCELAIN

LENOX WARE

Lenox Porcelain

PORCELAIN

LENOX WARE

glaze. This same glaze, pure as crystal, contributes, also, to the success of the artist and decorator, who is thus enabled, for the first time in the history of American ceramics, to produce in porcelain that which, until Mr. Lenox's achievement, could only be accomplished by the leading manufacturers of Great Britain.

One of the greatest advantages he has over his English competitors is that he can execute an order for a table

PORCELAIN

LENOX WARE

Among the Schools

ART METAL WORK

ROCHESTER MECHANICS INSTITUTE

service in three weeks to a month, instead of from three to six months, as is the general rule for obtaining the same thing from the English manufacturers. This is of great advantage in the case of fine services to be embellished with coats of arms, crests or monograms, which are invariably wanted in a hurry; in addition to which he has several artists whose specialty is heraldry work of the highest order, and the colors at their command will go a long way toward making an artistic and brilliant success.

Another of his triumphs is the development of the Belleek porcelain, which stands out as a creation of the highest excellence, combining the most exquisite effects of artistic decoration with the best elements of delicate potting, some of the more dainty forms being as thin as egg-shell.

Mr. Lenox, by these great achievements, is destined to become a keen and close competitor for high-class china in the immediate future.

A MONG THE SCHOOLS—OPENING OF THE SUMMER SEASON

THE Cape Cod School of Art, Provincetown, Mass., Charles W. Hawthorne instructor, offers instruction for both men and women in painting the figure out of doors, landscape, portrait and still life, in any medium. The local landscape is very interesting. Back of the town and within easy access of the studio is a wealth of material in brilliant white sand dunes, broken by the dark green of the bayberry and pine, while by contrast the ocean seen here and there through the dunes is a most wonderful blue. The town is unique even for New England. Mr. Hawthorne will give criticisms in all the classes Tuesdays and Fridays. In addition to these a general criticism will be given in the studio on Saturday morning at ten o'clock of all the work done during the week. This is an important criticism. The work of the students is placed on a large screen and each member's work is discussed by Mr. Hawthorne before the class. By this method the instructor is enabled to get a comprehensive idea of the tendencies of the student and can better advise what to avoid and what to cultivate. It is of the greatest value for the student to see his work in comparison with the work of other members of the class.

Mr. Hawthorne will paint once a month before the class, either the head or still life in the studio, or a landscape or figure out of doors. In this way a practical illustration will be given of the beginning and completion of a study. The students will have the exclusive use of a large new studio situated on one of the dunes overlooking the town and harbor on one side and the sand dunes and ocean on the other. Every convenience for work will be afforded. The studio will be open every evening until ten o'clock for the convenience of the students.

Among the Schools

THE Alexander Robinson tour, having left Algiers, goes up to Naples and Vienna April first. Toward the end of June the party will pass through Switzerland to Bruges and Holland, where the summer school opens for three months, running to October 1. A number of pupils have joined for the five months' Mediterranean tour and some for the eight-months' tour. Many of Mr. Robinson's pupils are advanced students and artists, exhibiting, as well as those who are novices in out-of-doors training. Pupils have come to this school from England, Scotland, Ireland, Sweden, Germany, Italy, Australia, Canada and all parts of the United States. Yet the number taken in sketching-tours is extremely limited. Thorough training in modern methods in all branches of the arts is taught. A feature of Mr. Robinson's work is his ability to demonstrate the methods employed and his well-grounded knowledge and appreciation of good composition.

HENRY B. SNELL will conduct his summer painting-class this season in Holland. The work will consist of outdoor sketching, from the model, still life and composition, either in oil or water color as may be selected. The class will be located at Volendam, the quaint fishing-village on the Zuyder Zee. The merits of Volendam as a sketching-ground have recently been the subject of an illustrated article in these columns. About six weeks will be given to sketching and the instruction will consist of two lessons weekly and one general criticism, with a talk on composition as applied to the making of a picture. At the criticisms Mr. Snell will aim to encourage the students by helpful suggestions to carry on their work to as great a degree of completion as their ability will allow. Many delightful independent excursions can be made to all the north of Holland. The class sails from New York, June 30, on the steamer President Grant. This is one of the Boyd Tours, about which further information can be had by any one interested.

Troy School of Arts and Crafts
ART METAL

BY RUTH CRANDALL

Amsterdam can be reached either by steamer or electric train, and the Rijks Museum, with its wonderful Rembrandt room, can be enjoyed and studied at leisure. The Isle of Marken can be reached by a glorious sail on the Zuyder Zee, or by little steamer, which also connects with Monnikendam and Broek, while an easy walk across the meadows brings one to Edam, where the famous cheeses are piled in the streets on market days. When the class leaves Volendam an opportunity will be afforded to visit the Mauritshuis Gallery, at The Hague, and cathedral at the old Belgian city of Antwerp, and the Louvre and Luxembourg, in Paris.

THE fifth year of the Commonwealth School of Art and Industry will open July 5 and continue through July and August. The school is located at Boothbay Harbor, on the coast of Maine, on a hill overlooking the harbor in the midst of beautiful scenery. The school more than doubled in size last year and the prospect is good for a large increase the coming season. Mr. Randall will teach a class in sketching from nature for the tenth con-

Troy School of Arts and Crafts

CERAMICS

BY MRS. POPE AND H. J. ALBRIGHT

Among the Schools

secutive season. Mr. Valentine Henneman will return to this country from Bruges, Belgium, to teach the class in painting from nature. Mr. William W. Manatt, the sculptor, will again have a class in modeling. In addition to these classes there will be applied design, manual training, normal art and children's classes. There are thirteen instructors in all.

THE Troy School of Arts and Crafts is well equipped with a fine lot of new casts and many most attractive objects for still-life painting as well as costumes for the models. The school is prepared to give a most thorough and complete course in decorative designing. Three years are required to complete this course. The first year is given to the study of abstract form, balance, harmony of line, spacing, etc.; the second year to conventionalizing flower forms; the third year to landscape and figure composition, while the study of color runs through the entire course. The classes will be instructed as follows: miniature, mineral painting and cut-leather work, Miss Adams; mineral painting, Mrs. Pope; wood carving, pyrography and Venetian iron work, Miss Pine; cast drawing, weaving, dyeing and basketry, Miss Durant; jewel and metal work, Miss Ruth Crandall; cast drawing, illustration, nature study, water color and oil painting, clay modeling and decorative design, Miss Pomeroy.

THE ninth summer term of the School of the Art Institute of Chicago begins June 28, but as the work is continuous throughout the year students may enter at any time except in the normal department. The work of the summer is especially arranged for students whose time is limited and who wish to prepare themselves for some particular work. It is a thorough, practical school. Students are advanced upon the merit of their own work. Provision will be made for students who wish to continue study during the spring and autumn recesses. This arrangement allows the students to enter the school at any time for continuous work or for a short period of study. The instructors include W. M. R. French, director; Louis W. Wilson, Jeannette Buckley, Evelyn Beachey, Herminie Stellar, Antonin Sterba, Margaret Baker, Arthur Gunther and Stacy Philbrick. The courses of study comprise academic, juvenile, normal, decorative design, pottery, ceramics, modeling, evening classes and French. The course in decorative design runs for twelve weeks, from June 28 to September 18.

THE spring term in the department of applied and fine arts of the Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y., began March 15. Instruction is being given in elementary and life drawing, painting, illustration, modeling and pottery, life modeling, metal work and jewelry, carving and architectural drafting. The metal work, jewelry and pottery shops are among the best equipped of any in the country. The class in pottery offers thorough and practical instruction in many forms of pottery production, including built, wheel-thrown, cast and pressed ware; also the decoration of pottery with relief, incising, piercing and slip painting. Instruction is given in mold making, the mixing of clays and glazes and in firing. The shop is equipped with two foot-power and four electric-power wheels and a small high-temperature kiln, besides all necessary apparatus and tools. The work in the class of metal work and jewelry offers practical training.

CERAMICS

ROCHESTER MECHANICS INSTITUTE

In the Galleries

Courtesy M. Knoedler & Co.

THE PICNIC PARTY

BY FRANCOIS FLAMENG

IN THE GALLERIES BY HAROLD BENTLEY

IN THE unfamiliar direction of water color the art of John Singer Sargent was manifested at the Knoedler Galleries last month, when some eighty-three of his studies in that medium were shown. Happily for him, as well as for the public, he has determined for the future to curtail his output of oil portraits and give considerable of his time to other work, of which these remarkable sketches in water color were an earnest. The decision is most fortunate for Mr. Sargent's art, for he has worked many years at concert pitch and, perforce, been obliged to turn out much that, not interesting him, was more or less perfunctory. Engagements for sittings had frequently to be made years in advance, and even then were only secured by the greatest diplomacy. For it was the fashion to be painted by Sargent, and that in a land where such things are as immutable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians. What the duchess of this did, those of lesser social rank had to follow. It might have been said in sober truth that no well-regulated household was complete without a typical Sargent portrait, and thus commissions fairly inundated the clever artistic man.

Despite the alluring prosperity, for these patrons paid well for their canvases, there was a limit to Sargent's endurance and fecundity. He yearned to have a little artistic freedom, to get to the open, and, besides, there were the decorations for the Boston Public Library to be completed. These water colors were the results of summer wandering in his beloved Italy, for there Sargent was born, at Florence. In these Knoedler Galleries were delicious sketches of Venetian palaces, churches and canals; here was shipping, with views over the water, and the man had traveled in Switzerland, in Spain, through France, with his materials ever close at hand, making notes here and there, limning the landscape, the woodland, now on the mountain top, again on far-stretching plain, everywhere enthusiastic, always with certain brush and with unequaled facility, knowing well in advance how to secure his result with the greatest economy of means. The lovely, unctuous sweep, the intelligently placed mass, so full of comprehension—all those famous attributes of the admired Sargent were discernible at a glance. Nothing more clever or appetizing than his rendering of the famous Santa Maria della Salute has ever been done in water color; his portrait of his friend, Mrs. Von Glehn, was a gem, and, in short, it was difficult to differentiate with so

In the Galleries

Courtesy M. Knoedler & Co.
THE WEAVER

BY GEORGE DE FOREST BRUSH

bly George de Forest Brush, some of whose earlier paintings of the North American Indian have been seen from time to time. His Weaver is an admirable example of his serious research into character and is an entertaining piece of craftsmanship. Some pictures by the distinguished French painter, François Flameng, are shown, notably his Garden at Versailles, with its many figures of the Second Empire, drawn with exquisite skill and authority and painted with distinction. Perhaps no one has made this much of an artistic feast as the man offered. Much interest was manifested and the public daily crowded the galleries.

Mr. Sargent stipulated that the pictures must be bought en bloc, which caused dismay to the collectors, and he further insisted they must go to some public gallery. Happily, all this was arranged through the public spirit of the president of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, Mr. A. A. Healey, who secured them for that institution, where they will always remain accessible to art lovers. Many American painters have happily received attention at these galleries, nota-epoch so entirely his own as has this artist. He has caught the sentiment of the time.

Courtesy M. Knoedler & Co.
THE HARVEST

BY M. DIETERLE

In the Galleries

IN THE Montross Galleries, 372 Fifth Avenue, there have been the usual one-man exhibitions all through the season and these have included the work of some of the foremost of the American painters. Notable among these was Willard L. Metcalf, a landscapist of the first order, a man who is identified with the best pictorial representation of scenes in his own country, who has made the Maine coast and the Connecticut hills almost his own in his idyllic representation of their poetry and charm. Some of his pictures have gone to prominent collections, one only recently to the permanent collection of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, a fine composition, The Twin Birches, elemental in its portrayal of an exquisite phase of nature. Another work was prominently placed in Washington, and this was a snow scene that attracted great attention at the exhibition of the Corcoran Gallery exhibition earlier in the winter. Mr. Hassam's fine showing included some pictures of the great West, whither the man went to spend several months in study and contemplation. This was followed by the combined display of the work of Mr. Dewing and Mr. Tyron, the former having, among other things, the wonderful panel loaned by Mr. Freer, of the girl playing on the 'cello. It was, perhaps, the fine flower of Mr. Dewing's work.

Horatio Walker follows these with his paintings of cattle, sheep and the figure. For years he has worked away in the Canadian villages, getting a French peasant type, such as one finds in the pictures of the master, Jean François Millet, with whom, of course, Mr. Walker is in deep sympathy, and, possibly, where the peasant of Millet seems to keep to a dull drab hopelessness, something in the air of this Western Continent has in a way injected a trifle more of hopefulness, of color, of movement and of the pictorial in Mr. Walker's men and women. We come across bits of brilliant tints in garment, in foliage and hillside.

Courtesy of F. Keppel & Co.

SHIPPING AND THE DUCAL PALACE

Montross Print, Copyright, 1900, by N. E. Montross

SPRING—MAN DIGGING

BY HORATIO WALKER

KEPPEL & Co. show at their attractive gallery, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, a quite remarkable collection of the etchings of Charles Meryon, whose sad life story is scarcely matched among the not infrequent tales of artistic struggles and tribulations the world has known. The man was unfortunate from his very birth, being a natural son of a London physician and a French ballet dancer. He began as a naval cadet but left that career for art and, because of his color blindness in the beginning, he had to forswear painting. So it was he became an etcher, but before he reached forty he had to be placed in the asylum at Charenton because of his suffering from melancholy madness aggravated by illusions. He left this place after a year and worked outside until 1866, when the malady increased and he was confined for a second time, dying finally in 1868 at the age of forty-seven. He found time, however, to leave behind him some of the most remarkable etchings, beautiful transcripts of his beloved Paris, for which the collector pays many times their weight in gold in these days, yea, even their weight in diamonds, for many thousands of dollars are asked and received for these fragile prints. Here are, at the Messrs. Keppels', some charming things by one of our own countrymen, Otto H. Bacher, himself a remarkable worker with the needle, an intimate friend and pupil of Whistler, whose work is admired of his fellows but whose recognition has surely not been overwhelming. We publish reproductions after two plates, The Rialto bridge and Venice, Shipping and the Ducal Palace, gems in their way. But, happily for him, though unfortunate for his prices, the artist lives.

In the Galleries

Courtesy of F. Keppel & Co.

THE RIALTO BRIDGE

BY OTTO H. BACHER

SPANISH art has occupied the considerable attention of the Ehrich Galleries, 463 Fifth Avenue, this season, many unusual canvases finding their way to the walls here, among them two examples of Murillo, one of which we reproduce. It is a Magdalene, of which this artist painted many during his life, and this particular woman is in the open, with a book. Alonzo Cano shows a San Stefano kneeling, in all the gorgeousness of embroidered robe, with a multitude of cherubs about his head, while in the Claudio Coello, the portrait of Isabella Clara Eugenia, Infanta of Spain, there is a remarkable portrayal of femininity with epic poem of the sumptuousness of apparel. Here is a mass of adornment wherein the detail has been elaborately carried out, even to the very pearls sewn on the garment, to the jewelry and precious stones of the cincture, of necklace and earrings, the lace work of collar and ruff, of cuffs, and the many feminine bewitcheries are all faithfully rendered to the life. Perhaps the most interesting of all the pictures shown is a modest, serious Luis de Morales, called The Flagellation, with the Christ half nude and a figure beside him. This is painted with a detail and a loving care that are most impressive. The tender expression, the suffering of the main figure one may not mistake, and all through the panel one is certain of the seriousness, the piety of the artist.

A. H.

Courtesy of the Ehrich Galleries

MAGDALENE

BY MURILLO

LVIII

THE SCRIP

SOME OF THE PORTRAITS IN THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM
BY ELISABETH LUTHER CARY

THE Metropolitan Museum contain comparatively few portraits if we consider the vast numbers in the Louvre and in the Rijks Museum or even in the National Gallery at London, but it has several shining examples of what we like to consider the great periods of art, and also a number of portraits that clearly indicate modern tendencies among the old masters.

An Italian example belonging to the first half of the Sixteenth century is given to Lorenzo Lotto, one of the most individual and interesting of the Venetian painters and one of the first to show marked concern with the inner personality of his sitters. This suave portrait of a young man, intellectual in appearance with somewhat melancholy and indolent eyes, shows a serious attempt to realize the unaccented psychological features.

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY NICOLAAS MAES

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY LORENZO LOTTO

The painting, moreover, is of the greatest beauty. The painter's charity toward human beings in general and particular expresses itself subtly in the tenderness of his drawing and modeling. He seems to caress the shapes that he brings into being on his canvas, and while there is a certain eagerness in his line there is also a marked restraint, as though he had cautioned himself against allowing his impetuous first impression to run away with his more sober reading of the individuality under his scrutiny.

If we compare this portrait with the Portrait of a Man by Rembrandt, which takes us another century farther on in the history of portraiture, we perceive a more emotional stress laid upon the inner life by the great Dutchman, who was, perhaps, less a reader of the souls of others than the interpreter of his own soul. Here we have a profound melancholy in the gaze, and the painter has used every means in his power to emphasize and sustain this impression of melancholy by the atmospheric depth and by the elimination of all distracting detail.

Nicolaas Maes, a contemporary and pupil of Rembrandt, and up to a certain point his follower, is represented in the museum by two portraits as widely divergent in feeling and method as any two that ever came from the same hand. One is that

Portraits at the Metropolitan

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY NICOLAAS MAES

flattering style of his later years. Even in his decline Maes was a great craftsman, and his pictures invariably give pleasure by their competent execution.

It is interesting to compare the portrait by Lotto, so completely Italian and Venetian in character, with the work of two painters living at about the same time in Germany, Hans Holbein the Younger and Lucas Cranach. The museum is exceedingly fortunate in possessing a very early portrait by Holbein, painted when he was only twenty years of age but realizing nearly all of his great qualities as a portrait painter. The subject is a young man richly dressed. The figure is placed somewhat lower on the canvas than in Lotto's composition, which appreciably subtracts from the effect of dignity, but the elaborate detail of the frieze in turn counteracts the impression of a minified figure. In Lotto's picture the eyes of the sitter look straight ahead and away from the observer, which, however, is by no means a characteristic of the painter's habit, and in Holbein's picture the eyes are turned toward the observer with a keen, searching expression, although the head is turned away to a three-quarter view. The flexible outline following so closely the character of the smooth young face, the marvelous creation of the textures, the heavy gold of an old lady in a black silk dress with a broad white linen collar and white undersleeves. The face is handsome and refined, the drawing close and the composition remarkably dignified. The figure is so placed on the canvas as to bring out the stately attributes of the sitter, and there are no distracting accessories. The hands, in particular, are painted with the greatest delicacy and the long pale fingers are eloquent of aristocratic lineage. The other picture is a portrait of the Duchesse de Mazarin, who is dressed in a gold-embroidered white satin gown, with a red mantle draped carelessly over one arm. Her white throat is bare and her beautiful brown hair is crowned by an elaborate headdress of red and white feathers. Her lips are bright red and her expression is animated. This picture may be compared profitably with that by Nicolas de Largillière, a French portrait painter of the same century, whose brilliant rendering of the lovely Mary Marguerite Lambert de Thorigny is one of the most striking portraits in the museum, despite its touch of artificiality. It was not Largillière, however, but van der Helst, the fashionable Antwerp painter, who turned Maes from the noble traditions of Rembrandt's teaching to the

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY LARGILLIERE

Portraits at the Metropolitan

of the chain pressing against the firm flesh of the throat, the velvet and cloth and embroidery, the soft fall of the hair over the bony angles of the cheek and brow, the pearly surface of the paint, as exquisite as that of a bit of old Chinese porcelain—what are these but the essence of Holbein's passionately faithful art, an art so true to itself that beside it all warmer art hints at surplusage of sentiment? It is astonishing how much of his predilection and training the young painter who had made his first essays in portraiture only the year before has put into his rendering of the subject. We see in the ornamental frieze his fondness for architectural and decorative ornament; we see in the designs on the sword pomel and in the forms of the rings and chain the remarkable freedom and grace of his patterns for goldsmith's work, and, above all, we see how his feeling for flat modeling and rejection of cast shadows began with his beginnings.

In Lucas Cranach the Elder we have a somewhat similar type of portrait painter. He also belongs to the Fifteenth century, although all the work that we know certainly as his was done in the Sixteenth. His early work was in the nature of religious fan-

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art
PORTRAIT

BY GOYA

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY LUCAS CRANACH THE ELDER

tasies, gay little Eves and merry representations of the Holy Family, a subject commonly treated with such reverence by the painters of his time. Cranach was not irreverent but he was irrepressibly joyous, and his beautiful picture in the Staedel Museum, at Frankfort, shows how brilliantly he could combine naïveté and good humor with enough sincere religious feeling to keep his work clear of vulgarity. In his portraits, most of which seem to be the work of his later years, he allows the serious side of his nature to come first, and he renders the physical appearance of his sitter with fidelity and gravity. But his concern is more with his craftsmanship than with his sitter. Few painters of the period were finer craftsmen than Cranach. He seems to have loved his material for its own sake, and in the portrait recently acquired by the museum we see at its best the jeweled beauty of his surface, the pigment drawn over the surface in thin glazes until a lacquer of exquisite depth and purity of tone is built up.

If we pass from the Sixteenth-century work of Holbein and Cranach and Lotto and the Seventeenth-century work of Rembrandt and Maes to Goya's portrait of Don Sebastian Martinez, painted at the end of the Eighteenth century, we experience a sensation of stimulus. The mind begins to tingle

LXI

Portraits at the Metropolitan

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

PORTRAIT

BY GILBERT STUART

in the presence of this icy craftsmanship, covering with its thin perfections the fire and force of an extraordinary energy.

Goya was a curious example of impetuosity and freedom of execution, turning in the painter's later years to a cold precision, giving the effect of constraint and reserve. It is common enough to see the timid caution of a young man's work ripen into that freedom and carelessness which characterize maturity and increase with age, but the other phenomenon is rare. This portrait of Don Sebastian belongs to Goya's middle period, when he was commencing to hold in his plunging pencil, yet before he had lost his vivacious and dramatic quality.

His brush has played with extraordinary ease about this beautiful head, with its clearly defined features. The touches of light rest without a trace of heaviness upon the surface, and the half tones are exquisite in their refined values. The figure, also, that so firmly reveals itself under the handsome garments, the sensitive hand in which the paper bearing the sitter's name is held, the slight sag of the coat at the shoulders, the naturalness of the pose—everything speaks of an observation so highly trained and so competent as to take in each detail in its exact relation to the whole.

Another painting of the last decade of the Eighteenth century is one of two accredited to the American painter Gilbert Stuart, the best of America's early portraitists, and in this charmingly decorative piece of work he is very nearly at his own best.

Finally, in Renoir's family group we reach the full flood of Nineteenth-century portraiture, to find it represented by the most modern of French painters. Whatever Manet may have shown of classical tradition, in the case of Renoir we look in vain for anything back of the intense personal note that makes his art that of the present day and the present hour. Even in this rapid survey of a very few of the more important portraits of the museum we perceive that the road from the personal attitude of a Lotto to the personal attitude of a Renoir involves passing through a new civilization.

Property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

FAMILY GROUP

BY RENOIR

The International Studio

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

| PLATES | CONTENTS, MAY, 1909 | PAGE |
|---|---|------------|
| RENÉ MÉNARD LE JUGEMENT DE PARIS See page lxiv | CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE By Arthur Hoeber..... Seven Illustrations. | lxv |
| ALEXANDER FISHER PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL See page 191 | RENÉ MÉNARD, PAINTER OF CLASSICAL LANDSCAPE Twelve Illustrations. By Achille Segard..... | 175 |
| C. M. C. ARMSTRONG A NEW DAIRY COTTAGE See page 215 | PORTRAITS IN ENAMEL By Alexander Fisher..... Thirteen Illustrations. | 184 |
| TOYOKUNI WASHING LINEN See page 223 | FURTHER LEAVES FROM THE SKETCH BOOK OF W. H. CHARLTON Seven Illustrations. | 194 |
| ALFRED EAST IN THE COTSWOLDS See page 229 | THE PAINTINGS OF ITALICO BRASS By L. Brosch..... Seven Illustrations. | 201 |
| WILLIAM UNGER A KITCHEN IN LOVRANA See page 239 | WROUGHT-IRON WORK By Edward Spencer and Eleven Illustrations. Walter Spencer..... | 207 |
| | RECENT DESIGNS IN DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE Seventeen Illustrations. | 210 |
| | JAPANESE COLOR PRINTS.—VI. "WASHING LINEN," BY TOYOKUNI One Illustration. | 222 |
| | STUDIO TALK (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS) Fifty Illustrations. | 249 |
| | ART SCHOOL NOTES: LONDON MELBOURNE One Illustration. | 250 253 |
| | REVIEWS AND NOTICES | 253 |
| | THE LAY FIGURE: ON FASHIONS IN CRITICISM | 256 |
| | WOOD PANELS BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS Four Illustrations. | lxxiii |
| | THE STEREOSCOPE AS AN AID IN ART INSTRUCTION By W. Martin Johnson..... | lxxv |
| | A SMALL HOUSE OF MODERATE COST—THE FINISHING Three Illustrations. | lxxvi |
| | THE COLLECTION OF MR. JOHN G. JOHNSON: THE EARLY ITALIAN PICTURES By William Rankin..... | lxxix |
| | IN THE GALLERIES By Harold Bentley..... Ten Illustrations. | lxxxiv |
| | SUGGESTIONS FOR THE COLLECTOR AND THE HOUSEHOLDER One Illustration. | lxxxviii |

Schools

Any additional information concerning art study and tuition, as well as circulars and advice, will be cheerfully furnished, free of charge, by this department. Address SCHOOL DEPARTMENT, The International Studio, 110-114 W. 32d St., N. Y.

SPECIAL SUMMER CLASSES

Summer Schools of the Art Students' League of New York

SCHOOL OF LANDSCAPE PAINTING

BIRGE HARRISON, Instructor. JOHN CARLSON, Assistant

THE ART STUDENTS' LEAGUE announces the seventh year of its Summer School of Landscape Painting at Woodstock, Ulster Co., N. Y. Woodstock is a small village in the Catskills, within easy reach of New York. Excellent room and board range from $5.00 upward per week. Tuition is $15.00 for one month; $50.00 for four months, and $60.00 for five months.

SUMMER SCHOOL IN NEW YORK CITY

EDWARD DUFNER, Instructor

The City Summer School will consist of classes in Drawing, Painting, Illustration and Composition, from June 7 to September 25. Tuition is $7.00 per month, or $20.00 for the season of four months.

Circulars on application to the Art Students' League of New York, 215 West Fifty-Seventh Street, New York City.

Cape Cod School of Art

SEASON:
JUNE 1 TO OCTOBER 1, 1909

CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE, Instructor
PROVINCETOWN, MASS.

For information apply to CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE, care of The International Studio, 114 West 32d Street, New York.

Martha's Vineyard School of Art

VINEYARD HAVEN, MASS.

Conducted by ARTHUR R. FREEDLANDER

FIFTH SEASON: JUNE 20 to SEPT. 20

OUTDOOR CLASSES IN LANDSCAPE, MARINE, AND FIGURE PAINTING WITH THREE CRITICISMS PER WEEK

SPECIAL COURSE FOR STUDENTS OF ARCHITECTURE—TO DEVELOP FACILITY IN THE USE OF WATER COLOR AND WASHES

SKETCHING TOURS to the many quaint, interesting and picturesque places on the Island

For Prospectus Address: A. R. FREEDLANDER, 80 WEST 40th STREET, NEW YORK

ART COLONY at Boothbay Harbor, on the COAST-OF-MAINE. Twelve Instructors.
ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET FREE

Asa G. Randall, Providence, R. I.

THE WOODSTOCK SUMMER SCHOOL OF ART

THE Art Students' League Summer School of Landscape Painting was first established seven years ago at Lyme, but was subsequently moved to Woodstock, N. Y. This little valley, located at the foot of the Catskills, was "discovered" by Charles Francis Murphy, Leonard Ochtmann, Birge Harrison, Paul Dougherty and Charles F. Jones. Of this group Mr. Harrison built himself a home at the western end of the valley, where he and Mrs. Harrison now spend a greater part of the year. Three years ago, when the league decided to locate their summer school at Woodstock, Mr. Harrison was offered the position of instructor. Dating from the acceptance of the offer by Mr. Harrison the school has grown by leaps and bounds, and during the last term over eighty students were enrolled in the school, most of them steadily painting from May until October, some staying through the winter. It is now, possibly, the only school in the world where instruction in atmospheric painting is given during the varying changes of the year—from spring, through the summer into the winter months. Each year specimens of the students' work are seen in the National Academy, Pennsylvania Academy and kindred exhibitions.

SKETCH BY R. PEARSON LAWRENCE
ART STUDENTS' LEAGUE

In the course of a recent interview Mr. Harrison spoke as follows relative to the school and his aims concerning it:

"About twenty-five years ago I graduated from the Ecole des Beaux Arts, after six years of hard and conscientious work there, and drifted down to Brittany fully prepared, as I believed, to paint medal pictures for the Salon.

"I gathered in a collection of stunning subjects, laid them in bravely and set to work to develop them into pictures according to the rules and standards which I had learned in Paris. I confess that I was somewhat surprised when at the end of a year's work I had not a single satisfactory canvas to show. At the end of eighteen months I began to suspect that something was radically wrong, and when at the end of two years I was still without a picture worthy of the name I began to be genuinely discouraged.

"About this time I was at work on another huge 'Salon,' a canvas some twelve by eight feet in dimension, if I remember rightly, which depicted the interior of a birchwood in autumn, with a single little figure of a peasant girl raking up the dead leaves. The picture was well toward completion. It was, I knew, well

"LE JUGEMENT DE PARIS." FROM THE OIL-PAINTING BY E. RENÉ MÉNARD.

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

• VI XXVII. No. 147

Copyright, 1909, by J. L. ...

CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE
BY ARTHUR HOFFER

For call to the art is a cautious one, but its appeal is irresistible. Nor place, condition or circumstance appears to have anything to do with it. Its summons is unmistakable. From the farm, the counting house, the mansion and the trade bench come the recruits, and once in the spell of the goddess, anything else is of little moment. Generally entrance into the profession means demand, sacrifice, discouragement, disappointment and but a modest recompense, but to the genuine artist these count as nothing in the joy of accomplishment, the divine power of creation, and if these do not suffice, then, alas, the alarm was false and the sooner the mistake is rectified the better.

In the experiences of discouragement, of serious affliction, of denials and final recognition the career of most prominent men is similar. There are few who are born with the silver spoon and fewer still who arrive at the higher altitudes. Poverty, true out of mind, has been the incentive of the pioneer and the struggle against odds has only spurred him on to greater efforts. Charles W. Hawthorne has passed by this road without disillusionment, and it is interesting to note his accomplishments in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties. Youth, however, and splendid physical strength, hope and passionate love of one's profession are powerful factors in making for final success. To have faced obstacles and overcome them is to have acquired a certain capital of courage and self-reliance, necessary attributes for arriving at the end sought. From Maine then, in 1890, came a lad of eight teen to this great city, feeling his mission in life was to paint pictures. His courage was greater than his financial resources, and as it was necessary to live in the mean while, many were the shifts to which the boy was put to gain the merest existence. Finally he was given a place in a shop where stained glass was made but where his part of that it was a very good idea. There was no one to blame for the complete failure of the project. They had no idea of what they were doing and thus could not be blamed. All that was left was to tell him that we would have to wait until there was a better idea to be developed and we would not have any idea of what he was doing.

[illegible]

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOL. XXXVII. No. 147

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

MAY, 1909

CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE
BY ARTHUR HOEBER

THE call to the arts is a curious one, but its appeal is irresistible. Nor place, condition or circumstance appears to have anything to do with it. Its summons is unmistakable. From the farm, the counting-house, the mansion and the trade bench come the recruits, and, once in the spell of the goddess, anything else is of little moment. Generally entrance into the profession means denial, vicissitudes, discouragement, disappointment and but modest recompense, but to the genuine artist these count as nothing in the joy of accomplishment, in the divine power of creation, and if these do not suffice, then, alas, the alarm was false and the sooner the mistake is rectified the better.

In the experiences of discouragement, of serious application, of denials and final recognition the career of most prominent men is similar. There are few who are born with the silver spoon and fewer still who arrive at the higher altitudes. Poverty, time out of mind, has been the incentive of the painter and the struggle against odds has only spurred him on to greater efforts. Charles W. Hawthorne has passed by this road without disillusionment, and it is interesting to note his accomplishments in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties. Youth, however, and splendid physical strength, hope and passionate love of one's profession are powerful factors in making for final success. To have faced obstacles and overcome them is to have acquired a certain capital of courage and resourcefulness, necessary attributes for arriving at the end sought. From Maine then, in 1890, came a lad of eighteen to this great city, feeling his mission in life was to paint pictures. His courage was greater than his financial resources, and as it was necessary to live in the meanwhile, many were the shifts to which the boy was put to gain the merest existence. Finally he was given a place in a shop where stained glass was made but where his part of that art consisted largely in sweeping out the office. Then came the chance to try a design or two, and immediately it was perceived that he was quite as competent as some of the higher-paid workmen. Thus he was advanced in position, if not in salary, and thus he began to feel that he was at last on the road. A little while of this and the night schools found him working away after a day of labor that would have sent most lads to bed tired out. But there was a reserve force of strength here that was not to be denied; the man was a glutton for work and he went at it with a sole purpose, with a definite idea of what he wanted.

Finally, with his few savings, he entered the Art Students' League, counting every cent of expenditure and living the life of an ascetic. He was regarded by his fellow students as one who would make his mark, and he was induced to journey to the Shinnecock Hills and join the Chase class. He made his home there with some fishermen in a cabin and he painted on canvas that he made himself, for the pennies had still to be considered. Then he came back to town and managed the new school of which Mr. Chase was the head, and, a stray patron coming along, he began to find an outlet for his work, so that in another year he was enabled to make his way across the water and paint for a season in Holland. Now he returned to teach in the Chase school, and a prize, the second Hallgarten at the National Academy of Design, came his way, to be followed by the first Hallgarten later on. Minor awards at clubs were his and the jury at Worcester, in 1896, gave him the second prize, while at the Carnegie Institute, in Pittsburgh, he won an honorable mention in 1898. This official recognition demonstrated, at least, that the man was to be taken seriously in art, but apart from the satisfaction of encouragement the baubles meant little to Mr. Hawthorne and he went his way undisturbed by praise or blame.

Looking about for a permanent place to locate he was attracted by the charm of Cape Cod, settling in the quaint old village of Provincetown, where the life of the fisher people appealed to him, and the Portuguese colony there was immediately laid under tribute. The first envois to the exhibitions were some remarkable examples of still life, of fish and pots and pans, and these were laid in with unctuous brush, in a broad manner, with certainty and artistic feeling. One was conscious that a new colorist had appeared on the scene, a man who expressed himself with freedom, with originality and with no little charm. It was a new note that he sounded and it rang clear and true. Then he introduced the figure, always retaining some of the still life, and these interesting types of foreign Americans stood him in good stead. He caught them at their intimate occupations, with their boats, at the fish, along shore, and they were sui generis. But he gave more than the exterior representation of this people—he put soul into them, he portrayed their spiritual side as well as the physical, and they stood before one as real, tangible human beings, full of hope, ambition and the struggle for existence.

LXV

Charles W. Hawthorne

Again came a trip abroad and Mr. Hawthorne went to Venice, even as far as Sicily, painting landscapes, the people, finding inspiration in the many types there as he had at home. Now came experimenting in a technical direction, the serious study of the manner of the masters, a restless ambition to secure the best means wherewith to express himself. Some of the recent things he has brought back with him are, I believe, as fine technical achievements as have been recently done by any of his countrymen. He has chosen to work in tempera and over this to superimpose oil, with capital results. One of his pictures, The Return, now in the collection of Mr. Hugo Reisinger, of New York, himself a prominent collector, has a sentiment rarely secured by modern men. The expression of the young lad is splendidly caught and is full of youth, hope and courage, while as craftsmanship it is unsurpassed. In The Auctioneer we have a type of the Provincetown fisherman that is to the life, while the painting is a veritable tour de force. One cannot mistake here the man's call to the arts, for the painter is obvious in every brush stroke.

In tenderer vein are the portraits of the artist's wife and mother, two admirable transcripts of humanity, full of thought, of charm and beauty, of old age in one case, of youth and feminine loveliness in the other, and again, technically, there is little left to ask for. The portrait of Dr. Abbott again differs in its way from other work, though it is eminently suited to the theme, and the little Venetian Lemon Girl is a gem in its way. Mr. Hawthorne, however, is never for a moment lured away by his

THE LEMON GIRL

BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

THE DOYEN OF THE FISH MARKET
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

Charles W. Hawthorne

PORTRAIT OF MY MOTHER

BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

technical facility—and few men possess it to a greater degree—from the psychological side of his sitters. To that he gives the most serious attention, searching profoundly, laboring intelligently, bending all his energies to the one end. Mr. Hawthorne is yet young, for he was born as late as 1872, and there has been sufficient encouragement to stimulate him to renewed efforts. That he will go farther in his art there is little cause to doubt. He represents the best tendencies in American advancement, in the development, if one may so say, of a native school, for he has painted mainly his own people—a healthy sign, one that makes for satisfactory results, since it is obvious one can better report the life and the times in which he lives, with which he is in sympathy and in close touch, than the alien conditions which of necessity he must see only superficially. It is, therefore, reasonable to believe he has yet to give us the best that is within him. A. H.

MR. GEORGE A. HEARN has given to the Metropolitan Museum two pictures: A Waterfall, by J. H. Twachtman, and The Pipe Dance, by Ralph Albert Blakelock. The Museum has not hitherto owned a picture by Twachtman and the absence of his work from the collection has been keenly felt, says a writer in the Bulletin, by the great number of admirers of this sincere and sensitive painter. They will undoubtedly be satisfied with this picture, which shows the artist at his best.

MORNING CHOCOLATE
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

Owned by Hugo Reisinger, Esq., New York

THE RETURN
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

HOME WITH THE CATCH
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

LA GIGIA DE L'AUBERGE
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

RENÉ MÉNARD, PAINTER OF CLASSICAL LANDSCAPE. BY ACHILLE SEGARD.

OF imposing stature, with a thick black beard, broad forehead, sparkling eyes, in his glance an indefinable tenderness and power, which qualities indeed emanate from his entire personality, René Ménard dwells at the top of a lofty house in the Place du Panthéon. Beneath his windows there range themselves in a charming urban landscape the noble fane of the Temple, the square of L'Ecole de Droit, the Rue Soufflot, the library of Sainte Geneviève, and that peaceful quarter of the town on the threshold of which St. Etienne du Mont lifts its stately front.

That portion of the apartments which is open to visitors comprises three rooms, usually thrown into one: a small drawing-room, large studio, and a little dining-room. A portrait of Mme. Ménard and some sketches of the artist's children give an air of domesticity to an interior of an otherwise literary and archæological appearance. Works of art, articles of vertu, and furniture all harmonise together and with the paintings by M. Ménard which hang upon the walls. These pictures give an impression of repose, of grandeur, of stillness, and almost always of poetry and ancient mythology. Some are inspired by a Grecian portico and the landscapes which may be surveyed from the summit of the Acropolis at Corinth, others again bring to mind the Temple of Segestus, the ruins of Agrigentum, or the Temple of Neptune at Pæstum. Others again depict for us a beautiful nude girl on the divine shores of Corfu, of whom one cannot say whether she be goddess or mortal. Here is a Jugement de Paris; here, in short, are pictures large and small, with no other subject than the sky, the clouds, and the fields of France, but from each of which emanates the sweetness, the serenity, and the poesy of the choicest gems of literature.

When I endeavour to analyse the reason why I have felt for so long this affection for M. Ménard's pictures, the belief grows upon me that it is because

"LE TROUPEAU"

XXXVII. No. 147.—MAY, 1909.

BY RENÉ MÉNARD

175

René Ménard

they afford me a pleasure analogous to that which formerly I felt in my travels in Egypt, in Greece, in Sicily, or in my studies of ancient authors. Before the landscapes of antiquity I find my sensations harmonising completely with Nature. The outlines, colours, and forms arouse in me, as it were, a continuance of their own vibration, a silent emotion, a lyric enthusiasm; and in such divine moments I feel myself in accord with the emotions, experienced in all ages in presence of similar scenes, which have ever moved men endowed with deep feeling.

Similarly, perhaps, in viewing the landscapes of Ménard—so intellectual, so pure, and so unconsciously imbued with an old-world sweetness—I feel myself in close touch with him. This may perchance be less directly the result of personal bias than because the same objects of admiration have attracted us—because as travellers we have been enamoured of the same ideals and found refreshment at the same everlasting springs of truth. Perhaps, too, the French spirit, and the complete harmony of these very modern works with our classical traditions, contribute, in no small degree, to my great delight in them. Take such a picture as Le Jugement de Paris, and place it in the seventeenth-century room at the Louvre, and it would at once be found to be in entire harmony with the works of Poussin and Claude Gellée. There is not one, I believe, among our painters who is so unfeignedly and so classically French. Ménard has the qualities of the seventeenth century, the method, the logic, the deep but disciplined feeling, purity of style, perfect command of the art of composition, the finished and exquisite rhythm, the taste for the magnificent, and the dexterity of technique. Nothing is left to chance, all is perfectly balanced. Reason itself is here subservient to the finest sensibility.

Strange as it may seem, it is not possible to divide M. Ménard's career into two or three periods, distinguished by different phases of his art. This is contrary to one's usual experience in dealing with an artist's work. The pictures gain little by little in purity of style, in simplicity, in delicacy of colouring, in intensity of æsthetic emotion, but they are all emphatically of exactly the same lineage, and almost

"SOIR ORAGEUX"

BY RENÉ MÉNARD

"PÆSTUM." FROM THE OIL PAINTING
BY RENÉ MÉNARD

"L'ÂGE D'OR." DIPTYCH DESTINED
FOR THE FACULTY OF LAW, PARIS
BY RENÉ MÉNARD

"LA VIE PASTORALE." DIPTYCH
DESTINED FOR THE FACULTY OF LAW, PARIS. BY RENÉ MÉNARD

René Ménard

always run the gamut of the same colours. From start to finish the gradation is incessant, but the continuity is never severed. What incredibly unwearied ardour in the pursuit of the ideal, what unruffled strength, peace of mind, what surprising confidence in himself and reliance upon his own convictions, in an age when everyone is flying from one extreme to the other! From this point of view, M. Ménard is in truth not of our day.

At present when one desires to feel oneself in harmony with our history, our hereditary tastes, and our classical traditions, how few artists are there upon whose work our eyes can rest with complete satisfaction. I picture to myself René Ménard, at that age when first one begins to know oneself, wandering alone through the galleries of the Louvre, and straying by preference, with no other guide than instinct, into those rooms where his feeling for order and method found that which pleased it most. He may not, perhaps, by any means have been most attracted by the work of Poussin and Claude Gellée, but, striving towards the same goal as these classic painters before him laboured to attain, he became, consciously or not, their co-disciple and their emulator. The circle in which he moved helped greatly to give all their force to these pre-established tendencies. His father, who died at an early age, was Director of the École des Arts Décoratifs, and, as is well known, was a painter, the follower and friend of Troyon, of Corot, and of Daubigny. His grandfather was a bookseller and bibliophile in the Place de la Sorbonne, and his ancestry can be traced, free from alien influence, back to its source in the 18th century in peasant forbears, established in the Ile de France. On his mother's side the same intellectual lineage is to be found. Madame Ménard's father was a very well-read physician, nephew of M. Accarias, the eminent jurisconsult, and his maternal ancestors were large landowners, from which class, indeed, most French families have sprung. Bear in mind also that in the continuous chain of the family there had already appeared, some sixty years before, a representative of the purest classical tradition. Louis Ménard, author of the "Rêveries d'un païen mys-

"CRÉPUSCULE"

180

BY RENÉ MÉNARD

"L'ESTUAIRE." FROM THE OIL
PAINTING BY RENÉ MÉNARD

René Ménard

"LE SOIR"

BY RENÉ MÉNARD

tique," was the paternal uncle of René Ménard. His influence on Le Conte de L'Isle and on Heredia is well known. He imbued them with the spirit of the Greek writers. Hellenist and archæologist, he brought to bear on all his studies the most acute penetration.

Even though he did not read Greek, René Ménard, so to speak, breathed it in his family circle and in the air of France. In cosmopolitan Paris, from the cross-roads of inextricably confused influences, he made, unconsciously, a selection in accord with his innermost ego. Among so many dangerous influences he allowed himself to be swayed by those alone which he found compatible with his peace of mind. Instinct is truly a good guide when left untrammelled. How much better is our individuality fostered when we set on one side that spiritual nourishment which, excellent in itself, often but disturbs and disorganises us in each particular. He saved himself from the dangers of such disunion by specialisation and by detailed and daily work. One is tempted to believe, when one sees the facile grace and simplicity of these perfect compositions, that they have been sedulously but nevertheless easily executed. Often when looking at them I have been reminded of the fluent charm of La Fontaine's fables or the delicate finish of a passage from Racine. But we know from their manuscripts and corrected sheets, as well as the testimony of contemporary writers, of what careful work and enduring patience this smooth sweet verse must have been the final outcome. When one looks at M. Ménard's sketch-books and innumerable drawings one finds testimony similar to that of these manuscripts—so many erasures, so much re-drawing, so many new beginnings. One finds among these sketches the same tree drawn, perhaps, twenty or thirty times with such scrupulous detail that one would say it had been copied branch by branch and leaf by leaf. Endless studies of cloud effects, portions of ruins, or of little valleys are to be found among the numberless pages of his portfolio. And with regard to the nude model, one conjectures that each movement, each posture, and each member in particular has been made the object of long and ever-renewed study.

René Ménard

It is easily seen that M. Ménard's pictures are not painted direct from nature. They are imaginative pictures, and not copies of reality. One feels that they have been executed at leisure in the quiet of the studio, under the complete control of an ever-vigilant judgment. Take, for instance, these nymphs in a decorative landscape, fair-haired maidens disporting themselves on the seashore, or placed like the Pensées du Lieu in a mountainous country, or in a fallow dell clothed with all the purple hues of autumn. The very nature of the subject excludes the possibility of its being painted from nature. These are imaginative pictures, but they are nevertheless in no way in contradiction to nature. They are beyond reality, yet intimately allied to it. The whole is composed of parts placed in juxtaposition in entire harmony. They are transpositions of actuality; and that phase of nature which each part examined separately will be found to present is the more accentuated in that the impression of the whole composition does not detract from it. The method of work is therefore easily seen. Sparing himself no pains, M. Ménard makes out of doors hundreds of notes, what literary men would designate as "jottings"—psychological memoranda. The preparatory work then consists in going through these documents and copying exactly the things seen and noted.

There finally remains the arraying of the facts by an effort of the understanding, the intelligence of taste, and the exercise of imagination. The subjects of M. Ménard's pictures are made up of diverse elements. The nude model that he posed and painted in the confines of his garden will be harmonised in his memory with the autumn tints of a wood in the hollow of a deep valley; those Breton cliffs will blend with a sea-effect noted in the Pas de Calais; that shepherd drawn while crossing a field in France will not present an incongruous appearance when painted with a herd of cattle on Mount Hymette (occasionally nature offers him the complete subject for a picture, but such are by no means his best works); that cloud effect observed one afternoon in the woods of Fontainebleau will symphonise with the truncated columns of highest Corinth. One sees, then, through what a series of modifications these finished compositions must pass, in the imagination of the artist, before being put on canvas.

In such a method of work, memory, imagination and discernment must play each an equal part. When the imagination is not found supported and controlled by the memory, the finished work ceases to have communion with nature. It becomes a conventional picture, an imagery more or less pleasing, brilliant or agree-

PORTRAIT OF LOUIS MÉNARD

BY RENÉ MÉNARD

Portraits in Enamel

able. Painters of our eighteenth-century school have not always been fortunate in escaping from this insipid conventionality. When an artist ceases to betake himself again and again to nature, he rapidly comes—and to this his successes especially will speedily drive him—to repeat and to recopy himself. In proportion as he is himself less affected by nature, so he ceases also little by little to stir our emotions, and he ends at length by pleasing only those who are incapable of real feeling. All who paint from memory have to fear this stumbling-block. René Ménard has so far avoided this obstacle, because he has never ceased to return to nature. His note-books and sketches are conclusive proof of his accuracy.

I trust I may be forgiven for having dwelt in passing upon these biographical details; our fathers live again in us, our home circle, our profession, our friends all emphatically exercise a continuous influence upon us. Even the physical aspect of a man whose work interests me is not indifferent to me, and I like to think of M. Ménard that he is a man who comports himself well, and that his private life is dominated by a spirit of order and method such as is apparent in his work, by a systematic freewill, a never-ceasing grip of all his faculties, and a perpetual stability maintained between his ever-alert comprehension and his nervous temperament. Such qualities, now scarce, gave their imprint to the masterpieces of the seventeenth century, and are those which have made us heirs of the most artistic and logical race of the world.

René Ménard retains that most precious gift of observing Nature, of being moved by her, and of returning to her for new inspiration whenever either memory or imagination threatens unduly to prevail, and he will certainly take his exalted place in that classic line of the greatest French painters. ACHILLE SEGARD.

PORTRAITS IN ENAMEL. BY ALEXANDER FISHER.

THE most pre-eminent qualities of enamels are preciousness and imperishability. These two qualities immediately present themselves to our minds when we think of an enamel, and make an irresistible appeal. For, to render permanent the impermanent, to arrest the ever-changing, is the insatiable desire of all mankind, and to give the semblance of permanence is, perhaps, the unconscious aim of all art. To record that which is fleeting, be it but the smallest fact of life, and make that record durable amidst the ever-changing universal flux, is one of the unceasing tasks of the

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF JEANNE DE GENOUILAC, BARONNE DE RHINGRAVE
BY LEONARD LIMOUSIN

Portraits in Enamel

HEAD OF CHRIST (PROBABLY PAINTED FROM A MODEL)
IN LIMOGES ENAMEL BY JEAN PENICAUD

artist. Therefore to make that record in a material which is almost imperishable must appeal to all.

To enclose the jewel of the life of his subject in the casket of his art is the ambition of the painter of portrait enamels. Yet were it not for the collector how few of these works would have been retained. For the imperishability of materials, that is such an important quality under the agencies of natural disintegrating forces, is not of any account during wars and revolutions. Thus the collector, as M. Lucien Falize says, "n'est pas un maniaque. C'est lui qui ramasse les morceaux, quand les peuples en démençe brisent leur idoles et leur jouets, —il les raccommode ensuite, et les leur prête quand la crise est passée." The Great Revolution must have been in the author's mind then, for there were many thousand works in enamel destroyed during that period. It is mainly due to the collector that we have some of the portraits of Leonard Limousin and of Petitot, whose works have retained all the pristine beauty they possessed when they emerged glowing from the furnace born of crystal and fire centuries ago.

For while the royal personages which they depicted and all their glories have long since passed away and the very dynasties to which they belonged have become but pages of history, these enamels remain just the same as on the day the artist showed them finished to the eyes of his Imperial Master. Pallida mors aequo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas regumque turres.

The impermanence of things is an ever-recurring thought with Horace :

Eheu ! fugaces, postume, postume, labuntur anni, nec pietas moram ragis et instanti senectae afferet indomitaque morti.

To arrest the transient, or to at least portray some fleeting action or emotional expression, and thus employ this characteristic of existence, has ever been the desire of the painter who wished to make his portrait the nearest possible realisation of his subject. To such an artist the illusion is all important. To carry it to its utmost limit is his constant aim. Thus an unconscious movement of the sitter, whereby the true character of the personality is revealed, is one of the means he selects. For it is in such a moment that the shade of self-consciousness which separates his subject from his vision is removed. Such an unconscious momentary movement, however, must be rendered in such a way as not to disturb the sense of repose, or it will result in producing the idea that the action is not transient. That is to say, it should be given

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF JACQUES GALIOT DE
GENOUILAC BY LEONARD LIMOUSIN

Portraits in Enamel

MINIATURE PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF CARDINAL RICHELIEU
BY JEAN PETITOT

so as to appear momentary, and not as part of a continuous series of such emotions or actions—in such a manner as the mind of the spectator after the first shock of agreeable surprise reverts to its accustomed poise, and not held there or the emotion becomes painful. For in respect of work expressive of the emotions it is necessary that the representation should be simply, directly conveyed, that the emotion be of brief duration, inasmuch as no emotion can be sustained for a length of time. The “fixed smile” is a case in point illustrative of the misuse of a transient expression. In this charmed circle of the emotions but few can tread a measure. Yet how many there are who rush in. The vehicle of enamels has not been chosen for this purpose as yet. It is rather the serene statuesque quietude of the subject that has appealed to the portrait enameller. This is the case from Leonard Limousin to Petitot, and from Petitot to Claudius Popelin.

The art of Petitot calls for distinct reference, as he employed a new method, and the results he obtained were almost miraculous in their minuteness and realistic beauty. The method consists of painting with unvitriified enamels upon a white enamel ground previously fused to a gold surface. Many of these are covered with a clear flux, which protects the surface of the painting besides adding a beauty of its own to the enamels.

It is difficult to realise, while looking at these calm, pleasant faces which he has so exquisitely painted, that some of them were amongst the chief actors in the dreadful drama of the persecution and massacre of the Huguenots. Jean Petitot, himself a Huguenot, fled to England, where he remained and worked for some years.

The point of view of the artist in portrait painting in enamels, as in that of any other medium, is always of the utmost importance. There is the obvious view of the modern realistic, there is the photographic, the entirely artistic, and the idealistic painter. The two former are so familiar to us nowadays that I do not propose enlarging upon them. They have more vitality than their dearest friends would have them possess. The entirely artistic view, generally expressed in the phrase “Art for Art’s sake,” will ever be one which artists themselves condone, but the public rarely understand. It is a view concerning the way in which the subject is presented and realised—the

PORTRAIT IN RELIEF ENAMEL OF MRS. CHADBOURNE BY ALEXANDER FISHER

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF SIR
HUBERT VON HERKOMER, R.A.
BY HIMSELF

Portraits in Enamel

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF THE EARL OF PORTSMOUTH
BY ALEXANDER FISHER

way in which it is done, rather than what is done. The subject itself is of relatively small importance. The arrangement of line and mass, tone and colour, is the essential thing. This, with adequately precise if not triumphantly facile expressive technique, is in briefest terms the artist's view par excellence. The delineation of character, says he, falls into place by the true understanding of the structural mass whether composed of rigid inflexibility or of rotund contour. In the right appreciation of values, in the power of balance and contrast, in the perfect envelopment of the whole in one conception, in the clearness and directness of handling, in these and other kindred respects, this view finds its means and end.

Dissimilar in means and end as is this view to that of the primitive portrait enameller, yet it is singularly in accord in one respect, that the work achieved should exist for itself. The appeal was made as a delight to the eye, a gratification of the visual faculty. Perhaps to the enamel painter there is another addition to this view, and that is the right use of the material in which he works. It is the right regard for the properties of his medium wedded to the art qualities of the design, which makes towards successful rendering of the subject, although the limitations laid down by the uninitiated, who only form their opinion from an incomplete study of old enamels and not the life-giving experiences of daily practice, are such as if acted upon would stultify and wither all advancement.

Then there is the idealistic view, which I understand to mean that aspect of nature wherein the knowledge of the truth, which belongs to the real knowledge of the laws of being rather than the external manifestation of those laws, is expressed together with the knowledge received through our senses. This truth is perceived by that faculty which rises to meet it in acute sympathy with the characteristics of the subjects, so that for the time being the recipient becomes the subject itself, so to say. The laws relating to that subject and governing it, are his. To such a one the realisation of things perceived on this mental plane—the dynamic rather than the static—is of paramount importance. He is standing within the inner chamber watching with mental vision the

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF MISS JULIA BUCKLER
BY ALEXANDER FISHER

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF M. LUCIEN
FALIZE. BY P. V. GRAND'HOMME

Portraits in Enamel

collection of tendencies which go to make the individual, he sees these rising and falling, struggling, aspiring for mastery, each for itself. The physical manifestation coming through his sense perceptions he keeps in due relation to this and expressive of it. He, perceiving these tendencies, selects the noblest, and records them in the belief that they will ultimately prevail. That is the idealist.

The few artists who have conceived their work on this plane have, when endowed with adequate skill, given us the great portraits of the world. And among these the masters in enamel portrait painting have a place.

The earliest essays in enamel portraiture were naturally done in the simplest methods, such, in fact, as the limited knowledge of process and possibilities of the material permitted at the time. This is necessarily the case no matter what the material or medium employed. The simplest methods are those of cloisonné and champlevé. The idea of these processes evolved from the setting of precious stones. It was this that suggested them and was imitated, and no further advance was made for some centuries. If the very slow development of method be watched it will be observed that progress moves from the simple to the complex. We have first such work as is shown in the Alfred jewel and the beautiful decorative panel in champlevé enamel of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Both these bear only the remotest resemblance to their subjects and can hardly be thought of as portraits. Here the capacity of the craftsman was limited by his slight knowledge of art and of the capabilities of his medium. From these elementary essays to the work of the 15th century was a great leap. For, as I have said above, the first ideas of enamelling were eminently those of a decorator of metal objects in colour, devised as a substitute for the costly inlay of precious stones. As soon as the idea of making a more complete representation of the person became prevalent, a sense of dissatisfaction with the inadequacy of the methods employed was felt. And as during the following centuries a development in painting on glass and faïence had occurred it affected enamelling, and the knowledge which was gained from this kind of work was assimilated and applied. In all probability several glass painters and painters on pottery became enamellers.

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL

BY P. V. GRAND'HOMME

The two great names associated with portrait enamels of this period are Jean Penicaud and Leonard Limousin. It may fairly be claimed for them that they and their contemporaries raised the work from the humble stage reached by the primitive craftsman to the rank of a fine art. These efforts, and particularly those of Leonard Limousin, showed a true appreciation of the art of the portrait

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF ANDREW, SON OF JOHN NOBLE, ESQ., BY ALEXANDER FISHER

PORTAINT
DA...
BY AL...

Portraits in Enamel

...the first of the ...
...the second of the ...
...the third of the ...
...the fourth of the ...
...the fifth of the ...
...the sixth of the ...
...the seventh of the ...
...the eighth of the ...
...the ninth of the ...
...the tenth of the ...

...the first of the ...
...the second of the ...
...the third of the ...
...the fourth of the ...
...the fifth of the ...
...the sixth of the ...
...the seventh of the ...
...the eighth of the ...
...the ninth of the ...
...the tenth of the ...

...the first of the ...
...the second of the ...
...the third of the ...
...the fourth of the ...
...the fifth of the ...
...the sixth of the ...
...the seventh of the ...
...the eighth of the ...
...the ninth of the ...
...the tenth of the ...

...the first of the ...
...the second of the ...
...the third of the ...
...the fourth of the ...
...the fifth of the ...
...the sixth of the ...
...the seventh of the ...
...the eighth of the ...
...the ninth of the ...
...the tenth of the ...

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL

BY P. V. GRAND'HOMME

ENAMEL OF ANDREW, SON OF JOHN
BY ALEXANDER FISHER

simple to the complex. We have first such work as is shown in the Alfred jewel and the beautiful decorative panel in champlevé enamel of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Both these bear only the remote resemblance to their subjects and can hardly be thought of as portraits. Here the capacity of the craftsman was limited by his slight knowledge of art and of the capabilities of his medium. From these elementary essays to the work of the 12th century was a great leap. For, as I have said above, the first ideas of enamelling were entirely those of a decorator of metal objects in color, devised as a substitute for the costly inlay of precious stones. As soon as the idea of such a more complete representation of the person began to prevail, a sense of dissatisfaction with the inadequacy of the methods employed was felt. And as during the following centuries a development in painting on glass and faience had occurred, it affected enamelling, and the knowledge which was gained from this kind of work was assimilated and applied. In all probability several glass painters and painters on pottery became enamellers.

The two great names associated with portrait enamels of this period are Jean Pemeaud and Leonard Limousin. It may fairly be claimed for them that they and their contemporaries raised the work from the humble stage reached by the primitive craftsman to the rank of a fine art. These efforts, and particularly those of Leonard Limousin, showed a true appreciation of the art of the portrait

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF ROSEMARY, DAUGHTER OF JOHN NOBLE, ESQ.
BY ALEXANDER FISHER.

Portraits in Enamel

painter. Their limitations were those due to an undeveloped knowledge of their material, as well as the controlling influence of the current art taste. The simplicity and beauty of their work is, however, due partly to the limitations and modesty of their aims. The faces in their portraits are painted in white enamel on a dark ground, with the smallest modulation of surface. The features are delicately pencilled with a dark outline, and the colour of the face and features scarcely hinted.

The method that I have found of late years to suit the particular qualities that appeal to me, differs greatly from all others ancient and modern, so far as I know them. To me the colour property of enamels and the translucent quality are all-important. To give full expression to these has been my chief aim. I had to abandon the older method, which is in the nature of a grisaille enamel, or a black-and-white study afterwards glazed with transparent enamel, because certain passages were never quite true, and therefore not completely in harmony in the colour scheme. Especially was this the case with the colour of the face; not that I ever wished to make a realistic portrait, but always strove rather to make the colour scheme in true relation throughout.

The method I employ is as follows. After making a careful water-colour drawing from life I analyse the arrangement of tone and colour of every part; the head, dress and background each into its separate tones. For the first coat of enamel (and I arrange to complete the whole work in a definite number of firings) I select the middle tones, making each successive coat of enamel only of the lighter and brighter, and the darker parts. Each tone is made by mixing enamels and testing each mixture on a series of test plates to which I refer throughout the whole operation—judging always by these test pieces and not by the appearance of the enamel as it is used, which of course is impossible.

There is at present a question in the minds of a small section of the public and beginners in the study of enamelling as to the suitability of enamels for portrait painting. It is the old age adage over again—"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing." It is apt to be disastrous, unfortunately to others besides those who revel in this little knowledge. Such questions arise from a misconception of the nature of enamel. The prevalent idea with regard to this is, that when it is subjected to heat it becomes so fluid that unless each colour is imprisoned in a little cell of its own, it will run amok and do damage to its neighbours. Such is not the case at all, neither is it a rigid, inflexible material incapable of any gradation. It is really, in the hands of an expert, as flexible as any other medium and capable of greater range of colour and tone. Nor is it more difficult to paint well in enamel than in oil. There is only one limitation and that is size. But it is not desirable to paint as in oil. The medium has its own qualities demanding an expression distinct from that of any other material, the realisation of which should be the aim of all enamel painters.

Another prevalent idea is that enamelling should be reserved for the decoration of gold or silver objects, or jewellery. That this is one very beautiful application of it is true, and goes without saying; but that this should be its sole application is as absurd as to say that all painting, either in water-colour or oil, should be composed of flat tints, circumscribed with an outline. I have deemed it most necessary to deal with this side of the subject in order to refute much dangerous unenlightened opinion, and especially so as it has fallen somewhat to one's lot to inculcate and foster a growing taste for all that is beautiful in one of the most beautiful of arts. ALEXANDER FISHER.

PORTRAIT IN ENAMEL OF THE COMTESSE DE
SERANO BY ALEXANDER FISHER

FURTHER LEAVES FROM THE SKETCH BOOK

OF

W. H. CHARLTON

A first series of "Leaves" from Mr. Charlton's Sketch Book appeared in our issue of August, 1907, the subjects being Montreuil-sur-Mer, Quimperlé, Dinant, Etaples, Concarneau, and Lannion; and again in June, 1908, we reproduced some further sketches of Brittany made by him.

"The Harbour, Boulogne"

From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton

"The Rue St. Jacques, Dieppe"
From a pencil drawing by W.
H. Charlton

Rue Saint-Leu
Amiens, France.

"Rue St. Leu, Amiens." From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton

"Rue Basse des Tanneurs, Amiens." From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton

Marché aux Porcs
Montréal / Mar

"The Pig Market, Montreal-sur-Mer"
From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton

"Old Houses at Amiens," From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton

*"The Cathedral of St. Vulfran, Abbeville"
From a pencil drawing by W. H. Charlton*

Italico Brass

THE PAINTINGS OF ITALICO BRASS. BY L. BROSCH.

ALTHOUGH still a comparatively young man, Italico Brass can look back upon a tolerably long career as a painter, and in recent years especially he has made great strides forward. Even at the beginning of his career, however, he had the wisdom to keep his eyes steadfastly fixed on the goal which it was his aim to reach, and along the road thus marked out he has proceeded with a sure step, never allowing himself to be drawn away from it. If one takes into account the condition of art at that time in Italy, it must be conceded that such resolute perseverance was no small matter.

At the time of which I speak, Italian art was, in fact, in a sorrowful plight. The biennial international exhibitions at Venice had not yet been initiated, and the art world of Italy had no inkling of the movement which elsewhere had begun to bring about great changes in modern art. Nature, that inexhaustible source of inspiration, had long been neglected, and when once this is the case, it is, as we know, not at all easy to restore her to her rightful place. And thus it was in Italy. Some went on blindly imitating the Old Masters, others were content to abjectly follow Meissonier and Fortuny, both of whom, in spite of their eminence as painters, did more harm than good to the development of art, for along their path of excessive technical refinement no further progress was possible. The imitators became more and more pedantic, intricate and lifeless. This sort of thing alas! proved to be a golden bridge leading to a mere ad captandum style of painting—"Kitschmalerei," the Germans call it; I say a "golden" bridge because it was from the so-called "art dealers" with their money-bags that the young men received encouragement to paint in this way. The public on their part were enraptured, and thus the two great elements of success, money and recognition, were not wanting. Is it any wonder that Italico Brass should at such a time not have been properly

"PIAZZA SAN MARCO, VENICE."

BY ITALICO BRASS

Italico Brass

"LACE-MAKERS"

BY ITALICO BRASS

bling brooks, listening to the birds singing all around him; he was fond of the chase, and Nature, who never deceives those who have faith in her, was like a second mother to him. His simple, childish heart absorbed her mysteries and wonders, which never fail to leave an impression on a mind and heart attuned to them. Some young lads, who are thus gifted, find in the pen the instrument most suited to give expression to their feelings; with others, it is the draughtsman's pencil, and this was understood? All the more gratifying is it that, as I have already remarked, he persisted unflinchingly in the right path, and never allowed himself to be seduced from it. It may be that his long residence in Paris contributed largely to this attitude.

Italico Brass was born at Görz, a town situated on the Austro-Illyrian littoral, in December, 1870. His early childhood was spent in this pretty little place, without any eventful incident calling for mention. But when he came to be sent to school, it transpired, much to the embarrassment of his parents, that the boy had no inclination whatever for scholastic study. He preferred to saunter about the broad, grassy meadows, or in shady woods; to lie for hours by the side of bab-

"ZATTERE"

BY ITALICO BRASS

"THE LAGOON BRIDGE"
BY ITALICO BRASS

Italico Brass

the case with young Brass. His father had determined that he should follow the calling he himself exercised — that of merchant, but for such an occupation Italico had not the slightest desire. He made frequent visits to an unknown painter of his native town, whom he assisted in various ways — copying pictures, stretching canvases, washing brushes and in innumerable other trivial tasks. It was not until he one day ventured to draw a portrait of his father, and the experiment proved a success beyond his utmost expectation, that he was allowed to go abroad in order to indulge, without hindrance, his craving for art.

His road lay first of all in the direction of Munich, the Athens of Germany, where he entered the Academy and studied under Raup. But the pedantic system of teaching did not agree with this wide-awake lad of eighteen, and again he felt called upon to set out on a pilgrimage. He had already made up his mind to endeavour by dint of unceasing perseverance, to become an independent interpreter of nature, and to this end unremittingly disciplined both eye and hand. Then he made his way to Paris, going first to Bougereau, then to Lefebvre, Benjamin Constant and Laurens. Here too, his love of freedom soon asserted itself; he could never tolerate being shut up in a studio, but must breathe the free, open air, surrounded by Nature, and so betook himself with his palette to the country where, unhindered, he might be an intent spectator of the ever-changing drama of life and movement which the forces of Nature unfold. In Paris he had become acquainted with a Russian girl who was studying medicine, and this young lady he by and by took home with him; finding in her, not only a wife, but a true friend and helpmeet, ever at hand to encourage him in the battle of life.

Many and many an artist's soul has been captivated by the charms of Venice. Here, where gently shimmering lights flit across the lagoons, where transparent shadows envelop like a diaphanous veil her canals, squares and palaces, and lustrous colour-harmonies fascinate the sight, the eye of every painter finds its longings satisfied. It was in the neighbouring fisher-quarter of Chioggia, that Brass found the motif for his large picture The Card Players, now in the City Art

"A POPULAR RESORT IN VENICE"

BY ITALICO BRASS

Italico Brass

"A SCENE IN BURANO"

BY ITALICO BRASS

Gallery at Udine, and so great a success was it that when it was exhibited at the Champs Elysées in 1894 it was couronné, and even the critics of the painter were amazed by its great fidelity to Nature.

Brass's first step in art was the painting of old folk, probably because it was less difficult than the painting of young blood. Even at that time he was able to render space-relations with skill, and his white possessed that brilliant transparency which gives his works their strong claim to our sympathies. Nor did he paint according to this or that formula or receipt — his vision was never that of a photographic camera. It may be true that Brass — like every other artist, perhaps — has ploughed in other men's fields; his Via Crucis, for instance, a work now in the Modern Gallery at Venice, is reminiscent of Zorn's linear or "straight-stroke" painting, and while in not a few other works there is no lack of originality in colour treatment, the general effect savours somewhat of pre-Raphaelitism or poster-art. But the stage of restless experimentation did not last long. He went on working vigorously, with a healthy, buoyant mind, and did not waste much time. Like a true modern, he has never specialised in any particular direction, but has always striven to render in the simplest possible way everything in nature that has a charm for him, without any thought of technical trickery. All his painting was done alla prima, on a white ground; only in the very rarest cases was glazing resorted to, and his work was never laboured. Painting grew more and more to be a necessity as well as a pleasure to him, and even the most difficult problems yielded to his skill of execution.

It now remained to capture modern Venice. If we compare the work of Brass with that of the eighteenth-century painter Francesco Guardi, it will be seen that with the former the view itself, though painted with spirituality, is treated almost as a secondary matter; he is concerned principally with those relations of tone which present themselves to him at the

"A VENETIAN GIRL"

BY ITALICO BRASS

Italico Brass

moment, and it is only in respect of the little figures with which he animates these excerpts from nature, that his work betrays any kinship to that of the earlier master. A certain capriciousness, a free-and-easy yet pleasing mode of expression, characterises his pictures, which have all the esprit of a sketch. Ours is the age of the sketch, for in no other period has so much sketch-painting been done.

It is an old idea that the painter must aim to give a fresh interpretation to the scene before him, to give it a meaning that no one else has given it. Brass's strong point is his refined sense of colour, and this is coupled with rare quickness of perception. His impressions of Venetian women on the wooden landing-stage, with the steel blue, sunlit lagoon in the background, are among the most beautiful and veracious of the kind I have ever seen. Times out of number he has painted for us the Piazza San Marco, now with lofty domes rising majestically above the horizon, now in a winter setting with its smooth surface glistening like a sheet of ice, but always peopled with a throng of gaily clad folk, who are transcribed direct from life by a kind of shorthand as it were. For the artist works in the open; he takes his easel with him, and setting it up in some coign of vantage, he proceeds to portray the incidents and people moving before him—to tell us, so to speak, the news of the day, the hour, the moment. Or, perhaps, it is a marionette theatre in one of the broad, open piazzas, which he fixes on his canvas, sketching in with masterly strokes the little crowds of spectators, who are attracted by the fun; at other times it is a procession, or a bevy of gossiping lace-workers seated at their work like so many birds in a cage, while at another time he depicts these lasses in the open air seated underneath shady trees in front of a white house, the deep blue sea forming a splendid background, and the lads who are with them are, of course, their lovers, for the young women of Venice are very attractive.

On All Souls' Day, it is the custom in Venice to construct a wooden bridge giving access to the cemetery, which is situated on an island, and this bridge with its throng of mourners has furnished Brass with the motif for one of the most distinguished of his pictures. Exceptionally fine in colour is his Zattere with its bright intonation; here the vernal clouds, the brick-red sails, and the bluish hue of the water whose surface is like a mirror, unite to produce a veritable tone-symphony.

In Venice there are not wanting traces of the changes which time is bringing. The dress of the people is not so gay in colour, nor so distinctive, as it used to be. It is true that the Venetian girl has not discarded the beautiful wrap she has been accustomed to wear out of doors, but instead of dainty slippers she now wears tight-fitting, shiny leather boots and a bright-coloured blouse, and contrives to make an effective display of her hair—in short she has, so to speak, modernised herself. It is this type of damsel that Brass presents to us in A Venetian Girl, with her black mantle, crimson blouse, white fichu, and red flower in her hair—all very refined and piquant.

Of the portraits painted by Brass I cannot now say much. A notable example of his work in this direction is the portrait of his wife, in bright blue dress, on a background of grey; and another example is his Portrait of an Artist, an effective portrayal of a fair-haired man in a black coat, painted on a violet-grey background. But in portraiture, the touchstone of painters in all ages, it is something more than a question of colour which occupies him: his aim is to bring before us actual, living human beings.

TREE-SHAPED TABLE STANDARD FOR ELECTRIC LIGHT, SHOWING THE USE OF STAMPED VINE LEAVES AND GRAPES OF CONVENTIONAL PATTERN WITH A FULLERED STEM. FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER OF THE ARTIFICERS' GUILD (See next Article)

Wrought Iron Work

CANDLE-SCONCE IN WROUGHT IRON AND SHEET STEEL, SHOWING THE USE OF VARIOUS RING AND CHEVRON TOOLS. FORGING BY WALTER SPENCER. SHEET WORK BY FRANK JOBE. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

To conclude, one may say with perfect assurance of Italcio Brass's works, that it is no ordinary effect which they produce. To them cannot be ascribed that absence of emotion which one often observes in modern painting, particularly in Germany. Imbued with the spirit of the present, he recognises no other teacher than Nature, that source whence new inspirations are ever forthcoming, and who speaks to every thinking man in a different idiom, and with a different accent, according to his temperament and character. L. BROSCHE.

WROUGHT IRON WORK.

NOTHING is more symptomatic of the perilous position in which the English handicrafts find themselves to-day, than the evil plight into which that most English of crafts, wrought iron work, has fallen. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, perhaps the most interesting and characteristic period of its history, when the constructive and decorative qualities of the metal were most understood and best displayed, the English smith was always the equal, and frequently the superior, of his continental rival; but in the nineteenth century when an unprecedented degree of national prosperity was founded upon the exploitation of our resources of coal and iron, the finer craft work of the smith was observed to be in absolute decay, and even to-day after the wonderful craft revival of the eighties and nineties, the number of first-rate smiths who are practising their craft in England and are able to put their best work upon the market, can be counted upon the fingers of one hand.

During the last quarter of the nineteenth century the immense interest taken by architects of the English domestic revival in every craft that could minister to the unity and completeness of their buildings, gave a tremendous impetus to smithing,

SCONCE FOR ELECTRIC LIGHT OR CANDLES IN WROUGHT IRON AND SHEET STEEL, SHOWING THE USE OF WAVE AND RING TOOLS. FORGING BY WALTER SPENCER. SHEET WORK BY FRANK JOBE. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

Wrought Iron Work

CANDLESTICKS IN WROUGHT STEEL, SHOWING COMPLICATED INTERLACING
FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

and the output of sound simple work began to assume considerable dimensions; while the occasional appearance of a veritable masterpiece such as Mr. Henry Wilson's organ screen at Holy Trinity, Sloane Square, or the late Mr. Bentley's grilles at the Roman Catholic Church at Watford, seemed to promise a return of the golden period.

During the last ten years, however, many circumstances have combined to check the development of the craft, to starve and cramp its healthy exuberance, and to stereotype the forms that seemed so full of vigour and spontaneity in the early years of the movement; the long-continued depression in trade has had a disastrous effect upon domestic architecture, and to cope with the dwindling prices and hollow-ground specifications of the day, the smith has been driven to a thousand labour-saving, labour-shirking devices that react in a disastrous and inevitable manner no less upon the quality of the particular work affected than upon his own skill and enthusiasm as a craftsman and the honour of the craft.

208

Commercialism and cut-throat competition, shut out at first by the almost religious enthusiasm for architecture and for the newly-revived crafts, have long since found their way into workshop and office alike, turning the architect into a draughtsman and the smith into a mere scroll-hand or leaf-hand.

The prevalence and popularity among the pioneer architects of the Georgian manner led the strayed Victorian craftsmen to a view of the Renaissance no less English than the masterpieces of Wren or Reynolds; but the fine restraint and solid constructive qualities which characterise the best work of this sort have almost disappeared in the weldless confusion of broken-backed scrolls and thin sheet acanthus that, under the practised hand of the modern draughtsman looks so important and expensive in a competition drawing.

Even at the best period of the English Renaissance, when the gates and railings of Chelsea were being forged, there was a notable lack of variety in the methods of the English smith, and though

CIGAR BOX IN ENGLISH WALNUT AND STEEL, SHOWING SECTIONED HINGES AND MOULDINGS, AND THE USE OF PUNCHES OF DIFFERENT PATTERNS FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. FITTED BY BERTRAM EDWARDS DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

Wrought Iron Work

THREE CANDLESTICKS IN WROUGHT IRON, SHOWING THE USE OF STAMPED FIR CONES, VINE LEAVES, ETC., INTERLACED WORK AND THE USE OF PUNCHES OF VARIOUS PATTERNS. FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

his fine feeling for pattern and proportion in design gave absolute dignity and architectural suitability to the work as a whole, yet the initiation of the apprentice of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries must have been shorn of half the mystery that waited upon the aspirants of the mediæval period at every stage in their advancement.

From a very early period, four or five hundred years before the forging of the beautiful gates and grilles of the German Renaissance, the English smith was already famous as a weaver of wonderful intricacies of interlaced and plaited strap-work in the hinges, "vizzings" and door defences of the late Saxon and early Norman period. From this period onward to the time when we yielded our supremacy in iron work to the foreign chasers and damasceners of ceremonial armour, and to the locksmiths of France and Germany, English wrought iron work is full of unexpected and ingenious details. Grilles of sober and monotonous pattern are made rich with a hundred different and fanciful scroll endings, massive hinges, bolts and doorstraps are ploughed with deep fuller lines, chamfered, swaged, diapered and tooled in a manner that emphasises the purpose of each part, without impairing its strength and fitness.

Finally, in the latter half of the thirteenth century, in the stamped work of John de Leighton, a method promising an endless variety of new and beautiful ornament appeared, flourished apparently for little more than fifty years, and after producing two or three masterpieces of luxuriant simplicity, inexplicably disappeared. The famous Eleanor Grille in Westminster Abbey, the best specimen of this work in England, is an extraordinary example of the richness and variety that can be given to a piece of work of the simplest possible design, by the judicious use of a few stamping tools.

It is a thousand pities, that a method so sound should not be employed to-day in the making of church screens and grilles as well as in domestic iron work and small architectural fittings, for which it is peculiarly fitted by reason of its cheapness, the ease of its application, and the immense variety which can be obtained by its use. For grille and gate work, however, one important

WROUGHT IRON TRIVET SHOWING INTERLACED WORK
FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

FONT COVER FOR OAKHAM CHURCH IN OAK AND WROUGHT STEEL, SHOWING SWAGED AND FULLERED STRAPPING. FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER. DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER. ZODIAC PANELS BY J. BONNOR (ARTIFICERS' GUILD). WOODWORK BY A. ROMNEY GREEN

point should be noted. The old stamped work was entirely one-sided, the forged-out ends of tapered bars being driven red-hot into a hardened matrix or core by blows of the sledge-hammer and the impression thus made trimmed up afterwards with hammer and chisel. This method renders the work available for use only under conditions that prevent one side of the work from being seen, as in the case of the Eleanor Grille, but it is quite possible, as any good smith can prove, to turn out stamped work double-sided by means of a double matrix, and thus to render the method perfectly suitable for chancel screens, altar rails and gates and railings of every description; as it takes little longer to forge a double-sided figure than a single-sided one, it is difficult to assign a reason for the neglect in modern ecclesiastical architecture of this beautiful method of work.

The accompanying illustrations show the modern use of all the above-mentioned methods in a variety of objects made during the last few months by the Artificers' Guild.

EDWARD SPENCER.

WALTER SPENCER.

A coloured etching by M. Ch. Cottet exhibited at the February exhibition of the International Society under the title Avila, Espagne, and reproduced as such in our last number, represents, we are informed, a view, not of Avila, but of Pont-en-Royans.

210

RECENT DESIGNS IN DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE.

THIS month our illustrations embrace several different types of building erected or to be erected in various parts of England. First we have illustrations, reproduced from photographs, of an important country residence carried out from the design of Mr. W. H. Ansell, A.R.I.B.A., of New Square, Lincoln's Inn. This house, known as Knappe Cross, stands about two miles from Exmouth on the hill overlooking the estuary of the Exe and the English Channel. The garden front of the house faces S. by S.W., and the windows of the principal rooms are on this front and the western one, in order to have the full advantage of the view. As will be seen by the plan (p. 212) the hall is the centre of the life of the house; from it the three main reception rooms are approached, and the principal stairs lead from a recess in it to the bedrooms on the floor above. The kitchen, scullery, larders, etc., are placed at the north-east

WROUGHT IRON DOG (PART OF SET MADE FOR L. H. LARGELY, ESQ.) SHOWING DEEP FULLER LINES ON STEM AND PIERCED AND TOOLED WORK ON HEAD FORGED BY WALTER SPENCER
DESIGNED BY EDWARD SPENCER

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

HALL AT KNAPPE CROSS, EXMOUTH

W. H. ANSELL, ARCHITECT

corner, the servants' hall, however, being on the sunny side and having a bay window. The external walls are built hollow with a $2\frac{1}{2}$ -in. cavity, and are bonded with Jennings' stoneware cranked bonding bricks. The floors are fire-resisting, and were supplied and laid by the Kleine Co. on their well-known system. The corridors on each floor are heated by radiators, and the ground floor rooms have supplementary radiators in addition to fireplaces. The heating was carried out by Messrs. Wippell and Row of Exeter. The architectural motive externally is of the simplest; the oblong shape of the lead glazing panes is the keynote, and is reproduced in the shape of the windows, and practically governs the elevations. Unity of motive, with the use of as few materials as possible, has been aimed at, and the result is a restrained and dignified house. The bricks are a rough tawny red, with plenty of varied colour, and with the hand-made roofing tiles, were supplied by a London firm. The stone used for the windows is of the Ham Hill variety, and the warm creamy colour

KNAPPE CROSS, EXMOUTH: TERRACE VIEW

W. H. ANSELL, ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

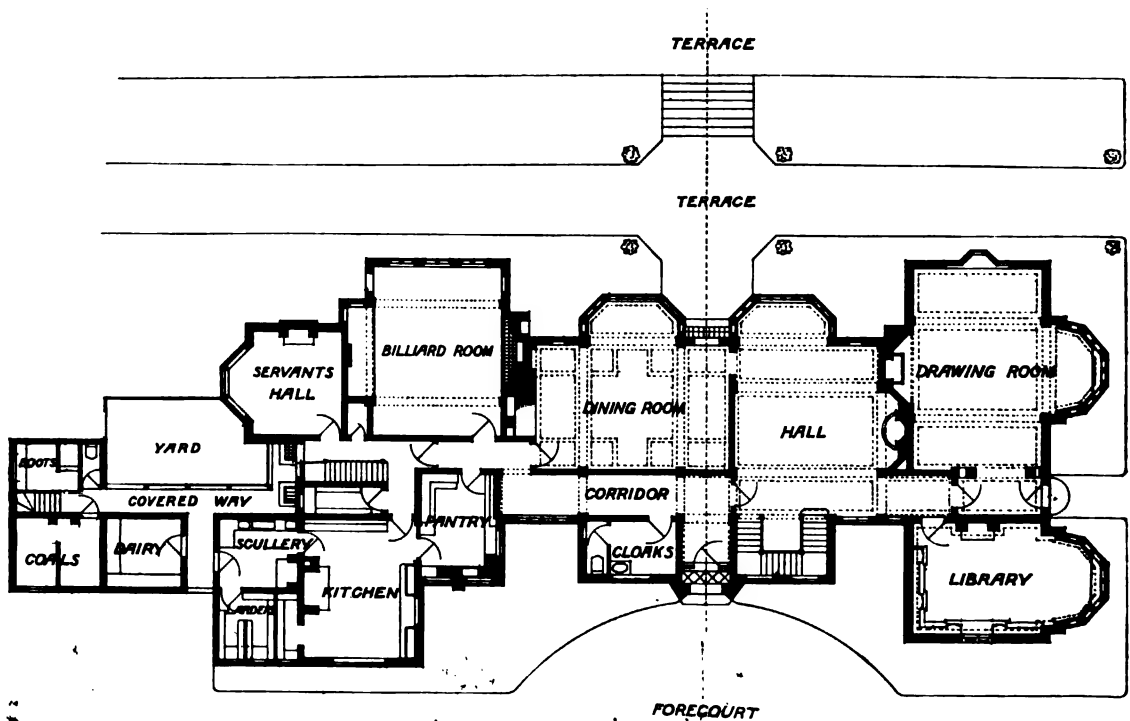

KNAPPE CROSS, EXMOUTH

W. H. ANSELL, ARCHITECT

blends pleasantly with the bricks. The casements and glazing were supplied by Messrs. Henry Hope, of Birmingham. A little interest is given by the introduction of small designs in the leading of the centre quarry in the upper lights of windows, and, as Devon has long been famous as the shore home of those that go down to the sea in ships (it may be interesting to point out, by the way, that Tops-ham, near by, once compared favourably with London in the number of ships it contributed to the over-seas trade), the staircase windows have roundels of faery ships. Internally a feature has

PLAN OF KNAPPE CROSS, EXMOUTH

W. H. ANSELL, ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

DRAWING ROOM AT KNAPPE CROSS

W. H. ANSELL, ARCHITECT

Messrs. Dart and Francis, of Crediton, who were also the general contractors for the whole house. The oak has not been fumed or stained in any way. The hall and dining-room ceilings are the work of Mr. G. P. Bankart, and the plaster work in the drawing-room is by Messrs. Aumonier and Son. A gardener's lodge, stable, electric lighting, engine house, and extensive vineries and glass houses have also been designed by the architect and erected. A considerable amount of formation work has been necessary in connection with the garden; terraces and lawns have been made, a been made of the doors and panelling, of selected west country oak, supplied and constructed by sunk rose-garden formed, and, with the Devon climate, but a short time will elapse before the

COTTAGE IN MAXSTOKE PARK, WARWICKSHIRE

(Plan on next page)

CHARLES M. C. ARMSTRONG, ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

PLAN OF COTTAGE ILLUSTRATED ON PRECEDING PAGE

house has its setting of green leaf and sweet flowers, without which no country house can be considered complete. The house was designed for Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Hoyle, by Mr. W. H. Ansell, of New Square, Lincoln's Inn, and built by the contractors already named.

The small house at Maxstoke, Warwickshire, which we illustrate on p. 213, was recently erected in the park at that place, and was intended for the occupation of the butler, with separate accommodation for a gentleman, should the castle be overcrowded, a special dining-room and sitting-room being provided on the ground floor with bedroom and bathroom above for his own use. Kenilworth bricks are used to the first floor level and the walls above are roughcasted a natural fawn colour. The roof is covered with brown tiles. The windows are wood casements with leaded lights. Mr. Charles M. C. Armstrong, of Warwick, was the architect, and Mr. Frank Davis, of Moseley, the general contractor.

Our next illustrations also represent buildings designed by Mr. Armstrong. The first is a private electric lighting station, erected on the Canwell Hall estate in Staffordshire. It stands in a portion of the park, and the design is appropriate to its character as an accessory

ELECTRIC LIGHTING STATION, CANWELL PARK, STAFFS

C. M. C. ARMSTRONG, ARCHITECT

THE LIBRARY
OF THE MUSEUM
OF COMPARATIVE ZOOLOGY
AND ANATOMY
OF
THE
MUSEUM
OF COMPARATIVE ZOOLOGY
AND ANATOMY OF
THE
MUSEUM
OF COMPARATIVE ZOOLOGY
AND
ANATOMY

room. The house was designed for Mr. Mrs. D. M. Taylor by Mr. W. H. Ansell, of Sutton, Lincoln's Inn, and built by the contractor named.

The small house at Maystock, Warwickshire, which we discuss here on p. 213, was recently erected in the park at that place, and was intended for a residence of the owner, with separate accommodation for his gamekeeper, should the estate be one day crowded, a special dining room and a separate kitchen provided on the ground floor with bedrooms and bathroom above for his own use. Kender's bricks are used to the first floor level and the walls are painted a natural fawn colour. The roof is covered with brown tiles. The windows are wood casements with leaded lights. Mr. Charles M. C. Armstrong, of Warwick, was the architect, and Mr. Frank Davis, of Moseley, the general contractor.

Our next illustrations also represent buildings designed by Mr. Armstrong. The first is a private electric lighting station, erected on the Canon's Hall estate in Staffordshire. It stands in a portion of the park, and the design is in a style appropriate to its character as an accessory building.

Canon's Hall, Canon's Hall Park, Staffs.

C. M. C. ARMSTRONG, ARCHT.

NEW DAIRY COTTAGE ON THE CANWELL HALL ESTATE, STAFFS.
C. M. C. ARMSTRONG, ARCHITECT.

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

PLAN OF DAIRY COTTAGE, CANWELL PARK. C. M. C. ARMSTRONG, ARCHITECT to a private residence. It is carried out in narrow cherry-coloured, sand-faced local bricks, with wide mortar joints. The dressings are in Bath stone and the roofs covered with thick grey-green slates. The windows are steel casements, filled with leaded lights and having gun-metal handles, and are by Messrs. H. Hope and Sons, of Birmingham. The ironwork is painted a dull black, and the white eaves are white wood, boarded with the rafters' feet exposed. Portions of the old gas-house of the estate were re-planned in the new buildings. The large engine-room is entirely faced with white glazed bricks with a narrow joint, and the flooring is in dark red and chocolate-coloured tiles laid to a good pattern. The generating plant was installed by Messrs. Drake and Gorham.

The dairy cottage designed by Mr. Armstrong for the same estate, and of which we give an illustration in colour, is situated between the gardens and stables. This also is carried out in narrow cherry-coloured, sand-faced bricks, with wide mortar joints; and an agreeable feature is the thatched roof, carried out by a Norfolk thatcher who brought his own fen-reeds from the Broads, which have already weathered to a beautiful soft silver. The woodwork is painted white throughout. The windows are filled with leaded lights, being wood casements to open inwards; lowered shutters being provided externally to the dairy portion. The open drying verandah and the covered way dividing the cottage from the dairy are brick-paved with wide joints; the posts and balustrading here are of oak, as also the lantern light ventilating the

COTTAGE HOMES, CHURCHILL, SOMERSET: FRONT VIEW. FROM A DRAWING BY T. RAFFLES DAVISON
SILCOCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

"setting" dairy, which room is lined with white tiles and has marble shelving; shelves also being provided for china and ware. The interior is fitted with the latest improvements in dairy utensils, and is heated by hot water. The surroundings have been laid out in keeping: herbaceous borders and roses, backed by an old high brick wall, being on one side, whilst a background of elms forms the other.

A brief account of the Churchill Cottage Homes, in Somersetshire, was given in our issue for April, 1907, when we reproduced two drawings (one in colour), together with a plan. Now that the entire scheme has been completed and the cottages occupied, we believe our readers will be interested in seeing the further illustrations now given, three of which are from pen drawings executed by Mr. T. Raffles Davison, and the remainder from photographs recently taken; and with them we join some further descriptive details furnished by Mr. Davison.

These Cottage Homes, as indicated in our previous note, were founded by Mr. Sidney Hill, J.P., of Langford House. Mr. Hill, whose decease in the meantime has removed a generous benefactor from the locality, left a valuable endowment fund for the maintenance of the homes. They are built on a beautiful site well elevated above the village roadway, and the quadrangle has its open side towards the picturesque wooded hills close by, forming a spur of the Mendips. The effect is delightful as one enters the quadrangle through the main archway looking towards the hills, with the flanking walls of the quadrangle and the sunk garden and sundial, with the enclosing terrace walls, the southern one being centred by a beautiful wrought-iron gate with graceful flanking piers. But, partly owing to the pleasant grouping and outline of the buildings, and the studied care of the details and proportions, and partly owing to the admirable setting and environments of the whole, we get a variety of views in which the quality of the design is a striking feature. A bird's-eye view of the whole may be obtained from the surrounding hills, and we give one opposite which fairly illustrates the general scheme and indicates the nice balance and emphasis of the parts. The peep through one of the open pavilions at the South end (below) shows something of the effect of the Southern enclosure with the pleasing outline of the distant hill, on which the modelling of the ancient British encampment may be noted. The quick perspective of the entrance front (p. 217) shows the dominance of the nicely proportioned bell turret. The sundial in the centre of the quadrangle is an interesting feature, which centres the whole group.

Each house has upon the ground floor a living room and bedroom, with a small scullery, larder, etc., and upstairs is another bedroom and a large storeroom. The houses are self-contained and free from the usual excrescences at the back; there are, in fact, no backs at all as generally understood, all the elevations being equally important. Over the principal entrance of the quadrangle is a large room for the use of the trustees, approached by a spiral stone staircase. This room is panelled in oak to a height of seven feet, and has a stone fireplace and windows at each end of the room

COTTAGE HOMES, CHURCHILL, SOMERSET: VIEW OF SOUTH TERRACE FROM ARBOUR. DRAWN BY T. RAFFLES DAVISON. SILCCCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS

COTTAGE HOMES, CHURCHILL, SOMERSET
SILCOCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS. DRAWN
BY T. RAFFLES DAVISON

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

CHURCHILL COTTAGE HOMES: VIEW OF GARDEN FROM PORCH
SILCOCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS

the quadrangle having moulded hoods panelled underneath, supported by richly-carved corbels. The walls are of sand-faced brick, with hand-made red tile roofs. The window frames are of oak, with iron casements and lead light glazing. The stone, which is sparingly used, is from the Guiting Quarries, and its yellow tint harmonises well with the warm tones of the walls and roofs.

In carrying out these Cottage Homes every endeavour has been made to obtain and preserve throughout the old-world character and quiet charm attaching to the many fine old groups of houses of this kind to be found in various parts of the country, and with this end in view no detail, however unimportant it might seem, in itself, has been deemed unworthy of attention.

It only remains to add that the cost of the buildings, including the furniture in the homes, the trustees' room, a cottage for the matron (containing a large sitting room, kitchen, three bedrooms and a bathroom), a small, but fully-equipped, laundry and other out-buildings, amounted to just under £13,000, the gardens and planting costing about £900 more. The architects are containing the coat of arms of the founder. The "worker" grates adopted for the living rooms are set in golden-brown bricks, with raised hearths of the same material. The bedroom grates have green tile surrounds and tile hearths, and all the fireplaces have simple oak mantels. A guard fender is provided for each living room, and bells enable each house to communicate with each other in case of emergency. All the houses are comfortably furnished with substantial oak furniture designed by the architects in harmony with the general style of the homes. The doorways throughout are constructed of oak frames and arched heads with oak doors, those in

Mr. T. B. Silcock, F.S.I., and Mr. S. S. Reay, F.R.I.B.A., of Bath and London.

CHURCHILL COTTAGE HOMES: TRUSTEES' ROOM SILCOCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS

COTTAGE HOMES, CHURCHILL, SOMERSET
SILCOCK AND REAY, ARCHITECTS

Japanese Colour Prints—Studio-Talk

JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS.— VI. "WASHING LINEN" BY TOYOKUNI.

WHETHER in grace and beauty of drawing or in delicacy of colouring, the earlier works of Toyokuni stand in the first rank of Japanese chromoxylographs. There is at times a Greek-like purity of line in the contour of the female figures of this artist which is singularly pleasing, and which, as in the one to the left of the illustration here reproduced, places his art upon a higher pinnacle than that attained by the work of any of his followers, and especially by those who in later years took his name. No more convincing example of dainty colour harmony is to be found in Japanese work than in the simple but carefully considered scheme of greys and pinks revealed in the robe of the figure referred to. The late Albert Moore might have taken a hint from such another print.

STUDIO-TALK.

(From Our Own Correspondents.)

LONDON.—The news of Mr. Charles Conder's death reached us last month just as we were going to press, and we were able to make only the briefest possible reference to it. Mr. Conder was only forty years of age, having been born in London in May, 1868, but though he had not attained the prime of life his eminent qualities as a painter had for years been recognised by those whose judgment counts for anything. It was, of course, his wonderful sense of colour that gave his art its unique character, and this far outweighed any shortcomings he had as a draughtsman. An article on Mr. Conder's Paintings on Silk was contributed to this magazine in May, 1898, by Mr. D. S. MacColl, among the illustrations being a portrait of the artist from a photograph taken about that time; and again, four years ago an article was devoted to a room decorated by him.

We have also to record the death in Paris, on the 26th February, of M. Emmanuel Poiré, the famous caricaturist known to the world under his Russian pseudonym of Caran d'Ache (karandash = pencil). His family had been settled in Russia from the time of the Napoleonic wars, and he was born in Moscow in 1858, but migrated to Paris early in life. Curiously enough an article on his work as a caricaturist appears in the same volume of this magazine as that which contains the article on Mr. Conder's silk paintings referred to above.

The death of Mr. Frederick Goulding, which took place early last month, deprives the etchers of

"THE FISH MARKET, COPENHAGEN" (ETCHING)

(Reproduced with four others by permission of Mr. R. Gutkunst)

BY H. MULREADY STONE

r Prints—Studio-Talk

BY N. T. S.—

... drawing or in
... works of Toyo-
... Japanese chromo-
... Grek life spirit
... ide figures of this
... ng, and which, as in
... where reproduced,
... ter pinnacle than that
... y of his followers, and
... ater years to tell his name.
... example of dusty colour
... in Japanese work than in
... any considered scheme
... and to the robe of the figure
... late Albert Moore might have
... such another print.

STUDIO-TALK.

(Our Own Correspondent.)

ON.—The news of Mr. Chas-
... onder's death reached us last night.
... st as we were going to press, we ... were able to make only the briefest
... erence to it. Mr. Corder's only

... forty years of age, having been born in London
... in May, 1868, but though he had not attained the
... prime of life his eminent qualities as a painter
... had for years been recognised by those whose
... judgment counts for anything. It was of course
... his wonderful sense of colour that gave his art its ... unique character, and this far outweighed any short... comings he had as a draughtsman. An article on
... Mr. Corder's Paintings of Silk was contributed ... to this magazine in May, 1893, by Mr. D. S.
... M. offered a long illustration being a portrait ... of the artist from a photograph taken about that ... time, and at the same time an article was ... devoted to a room decorated by him.

— — — — —
We have now to record the death in Paris on
... the 16th January, of M. Emmanuel Fougere, a ... famous caricaturist known to the world under the ... pseudonym of Caron d'Ache (Karam's) =
... =p... His family had been settled in Russia
... at the time of the Napoleonic wars, and he was
... in Moscow in 1815, but migrated to Paris
... early in life. Curiously enough an article on his ... work as a caricaturist appears in the same volume
... of this magazine as that which contains the article
... on Mr. Corder's silk paintings referred to above.

— — — — —
The death of Mr. Frederick Goulding, which ... took place early last month, deprives the etchers of

"SH. MARKET, COPENHAGEN" (ETCHING)

(Reproduced with four colors by permission of Mr. R. Gutchenit)

BY H. MULREARY (1892)

"WASHING LINEN." BY TOYOKUNI.

Studio-Talk

"DRYING GROUND, COPENHAGEN" (ETCHING)
BY H. MULREADY STONE

selections from his plates which we reproduce will enable readers to acquaint themselves with his pleasant art. It is in such small and deliberate treatment as The Corner Shop that we find Mr. Stone at his best, and his work in this vein should bring him very quickly to the forefront as an etcher.

At the Goupil Gallery the pastels of M. Simon Bussy proved an attraction. They are decorative impromptus, inspired by nature, but imaginative in effect; their interest, however, being somewhat diminished by a tendency on the artist's part to accept a species of mere pattern work as a substitute sometimes for other decorative possibilities in his subjects.

At the Ryder Gallery the delightful art of G. Leon Little formed an interesting exhibition, for Mr. Little's methods sympathetically interpret the simplicity of vision and the genuine love of the countryside which seem the convincing elements of his pictures.

The Women's International Art Club, whose tenth exhibition closed in March at the Grafton Galleries, is indeed to be congratulated upon the very high, all-round standard attained in so large an exhibition. Among the many works which had claims to individual mention it would be impossible to omit the Grass of Parnassus, by E. C. Austen Brown; Barbara, by Mary Creighton; St. Nazaire de la Cilt, by I. A.

this country of a valuable ally, for besides being himself an etcher of considerable ability, he was, perhaps, the best printer of etchings this generation has known, and those who realise how much depends on the way an etching is printed will readily concede his claim to remembrance on this account alone.

We have derived considerable pleasure from the plates of Mr. H. Mulready Stone, an etcher who has only lately invited opinions on his powers by a recent exhibition at Mr. Gutekunst's gallery. The

"THE FISH MARKET, COPENHAGEN" (ETCHING) BY H. MULREADY STONE

Studio-Talk

"THE CORNER SHOP" (ETCHING)

BY H. MULREADY STONE

The Blue Shutter, by M. Moscheles ; Sisters, by Laura Clunas ; An Invitation, by H. Halhed ; A Sunny Corner, by F. Small ; Mrs. Kingsford's Children, by Aimée Muspratt ; Open-air Portrait, by E. Wright ; A Portrait, by B. Heriot ; A Garden in Stirlingshire, by Elise Thompson ; The Auction, by Clare Atwood ; and in the water-colour room Blakeney from the Marsh, by E. M. Lister ; St. Nicholas, Furnes, by H. B. Wilson ; the coloured woodcuts of E. C. Austen Brown ; On the Sussex Downs, by Amy Atkinson, and A Drama in Tinsel, by Gertrude Lindsay, and the very charming illustrations for Mrs. Ewing's books, by M. V. Wheelhouse. Interesting were the two

Dods-Withers ; Monseigneur, by Vera Willoughby ; Ave Maria, by E. Somerville ; By the Pool and Morning by the Grand Morin, by E. Q. Henriques ; Misses E. Kirkpatrick, B. L. Goff, E. C. Woodward, and Ethel Virtue and Mrs. E. Eastlake also exhibited to advantage on this occasion.

"OLD CANAL, COPENHAGEN" (ETCHING)

BY H. MULREADY STONE

Studio-Talk

"A VILLAGE CORNER, PICARDY" BY NORMAN GARSTIN

The Walker Gallery in Bond Street is showing this month a representative collection of the recent work of Mr. Norman Garstin, the Newlyn artist whose earlier work in various media is familiar to most of our readers. The two water-colours of scenes in Picardy here reproduced illustrate well the methods of an artist who has more than ordinary individuality of outlook and power of technical expression. His directness of statement and freshness of handling give to his studies of nature a definite significance as frank records of simple facts, and make them decoratively pleasing without diminishing their value as realities. One of the greater merits of his work is its freedom from insistence upon trivial details which do not help the general effect; its breadth of manner is eminently attractive because it comes from a sound power of analysing essentials and from a carefully cultivated perception of what is necessary for well-adjusted pictorial arrangement. Mr. Garstin has, too, a happy knack of suggesting the characteristic atmosphere of the particular district in which he happens to be working; he does not follow a studio convention and reduce everything to a kind of preconceived pattern, he is rightly responsive to the impressions of the moment and allows them to exercise their full influence in deciding the manner of his expression. His wanderings in search of material have made him acquainted with many parts of the world, and he deals with equal success with subjects at home and abroad.

The fifth exhibition of the Society of Twelve contained, as usual, many etchings, lithographs and drawings of distinction, Mr. Charles Shannon's lithographs The Bead Necklace and Playmates, Mr. W. Rothenstein's portrait of Gerhard Hauptmann with its strong and sympathetic line, Mr. Orpen's studies of babies, Mr. George Clausen's The Old Reaper, coming prominently to our minds. The Study of a Girl, by Mr. A. E. John, was fired with life itself. Mr. F. Dodd's The Tall Shiner represented him best. Mr. Sturge Moore exhibited prints of as much beauty as ever, and Prof. Legros, Mr. D. Y. Cameron and Mr. Muirhead Bone were each very characteristically

"A FARM ENTRANCE, PICARDY"

BY NORMAN GARSTIN

"INTÉRIEUR DE L'ÉGLISE ST. MARC, VENISE."

BY PIERRE BRACQUEMOND

represented, though the latter not so importantly as usual, and there were a series of drawings finely classical in spirit though dealing often with modern Italian life by Mr. J. Havard Thomas. Messrs. Wm. Strang, A.R.A., and Gordon Craig were not represented.

At Mr. Thomas McLean's gallery in February M. Pierre Bracquemond proved to Londoners his inheritance of a good share of the gifts possessed by his father, the distinguished etcher. M. Bracquemond's medium, however, is not etching; his subjects, many of them interiors, reveal a painter coping with difficulties which prove the resources of his art and witness to his unusual skill. Our reproduction on this page has been selected from his admirable exhibition. Miss Emily W. Paterson's exhibition, "From the North Sea to the Adriatic," at this gallery was one containing many highly successful results in water-colour—notably The Pink Tent, The Doge's Palace, with its admirable treatment of green water, and The North Sea.

Mr. East has always been a close student of tree-forms, and in making a picture it generally interests him to set himself a problem to solve on the way. In the case of our supplement, In the Cotswolds, he has very effectually solved the difficulties of painting one green upon another without either indefiniteness or monotony of colour.

The second exhibition of the New Society of Painters and Sculptors at the Rowley Gallery revealed some changes in the exhibiting membership since last year. Nine painters exhibited, and as the work of quite young painters the show was very interesting. The excellently painted Stored Apples best represented Mr. M. Nosworthy. Mr. C. F. Hamilton exploited a marked penchant for the ugly in drawings which show sensitiveness to good influences, that of Degas perhaps being most conspicuous. The decorative Harvest Home was the most noticeable item of Mr. J. Hodgson Lobley's work. There was an open-air flavour and good painting in Mr. R. G. Brundrit's work, and Mr. T. T. Blaylock's Trawlers was interesting. Mr. Louis Sargent's The Morning Walk sums up in one canvas all the elements of that artificiality of colour which in one form or another cheapens the character of all his pictures; and since these had perhaps more character than anything else in the room, this is a pity. The note of caricature spoils The Morning Walk too, depriving what is an admirable effect of composition of its dignity. Mr. A. S. Wilkinson is another painter with the same distressing appetite for artificialities of effect, yet with an evident feeling for the truer qualities of emotional colour. We found some refreshment in Mr. J. Nickal's Arundel

INTERIOR, "SENSE"

BY PIERRE BRAQUE-MOND

the artist, but the latter not so importantly. He has done a series of drawings finely drawn, and with a feeling often with modern feeling, and a sense of form and Thomas. Messrs. Gordon Craig and Gordon Craig were not the only ones.

At Mr. Thomas M. Dean's gallery in February Mr. East's exhibition proved to Londoners his inheritance of a good share of the gifts possessed by his father, the distinguished etcher. Mr. Braque-mond's medium, however, is not etching; his subjects, many of them interiors, reveal a painter coping with difficulties which prove the resources of his art and witness to his unusual skill. Our reproduction on this page has been selected from his admirable exhibition. Miss Emily W. Pater's exhibition, "From the North Sea to the South Sea" at this gallery was one containing many successful results in water colour—notably The Fish Tent, The Dog's Palace, with its admirable treatment of water, and The Morning.

Mr. East has always been a close student of the form of a picture in general, and it is his to see himself a problem to solve in a way. In the case of the supplement, In the Morning, he has very effectively solved the problem of painting one green into another without either definiteness or monotony of colour.

The second exhibition of the New Society of Painters and Sculptors at the Rowley Gallery revealed some change in the exhibiting membership since last year. Nine painters exhibited and the work of quite young painters the show was very interesting. The excellently painted Street Apples best represented Mr. M. Nosworthy. Mr. C. F. Hamilton exhibited a marked penchant for the ugly in drawings which show sensitiveness to good influences, that of Degas perhaps being most conspicuous. The decorative Home was the most noticeable item of Mr. J. Hodgson Lobley's work. There was an open air flavour and good painting in Mr. K. V. Brandt's work, and Mr. T. T. Lloyd's Travellers was interesting. Mr. Louis Sargent's The Morning Walk sums up in one canvas all the elements of that artificiality of colour which in form or another cheapens the character of all pictures; and since these had perhaps more character than anything else in the room, this is a pity. The note of caricature spoils The Morning, and too, depriving what is an admirable effect of composition of its dignity. Mr. A. S. Wilkie is another painter with the same distressing appeal for artificialities of effect, yet with an evident feeling for the truer qualities of emotional colour. We found some refreshment in Mr. J. Nickle's Home.

"IN THE COTSWOLDS." FROM THE OIL
PAINTING BY ALFRED EAST, A.R.A., P.R.B.A.

Studio-Talk

"LE FAUNE" (WATER-COLOUR) BY GASTON LA TOUCHE

Park and The Weald Brooks, with their evidence of less desire for advertisement.

With the Old Dudley Art Society, who have been exhibiting at the Alpine Club, one kind of thing is done thoroughly well, but it is comparatively easy, and nearly all attempts to embrace the real difficulties of the art of painting seem with this society to end in mediocrity. There are, of course, exceptions, notably in the art of the president and vice-president, Mr. Burleigh Bruhl and Mr. W. S. Stacey, and a small group whose art loyally supports theirs, such as Messrs. Charles Dixon, J. P. Brinson, D. C. Dunlop, J. Finnemore, Sylvester Stannard. Works of character were Mr. Lexdon Peacock's The Old Lavender Bush, Miss M. Stone's Highland Heather, Mr. M. H. Carlisle's On the Beach, Florida, Miss G. Peel's In the long Afternoon—and there was Mr. Lawson Wood's inspiring and artistic humour and the old-fashioned but accomplished art of Innes Fripp, but we sadly missed the work of Sir W. Eden and Mr. Haité.

Among other recent exhibitions that of Old World Gardens by Mr. E. Arthur Rowe, at the Dowdeswell Gallery, was of its kind, perfect.

Of course such art declines many difficulties, but those which Mr. Rowe embraces he succeeds with beautifully. Miss Grace Joel's exhibition at the Doré Gallery was dominated by her portrait of Mlle. la Comtesse de M., exhibited at the New Gallery last year and commented on by us at the time. No preceding work of hers challenges it, but the fact of such a standard being once attained invites us to anticipate successes in the future for this artist, who we understand hails from New Zealand.

The Design Club was formally inaugurated in February, when a large and representative gathering of designers and others met at the Club's quarters in Newman Street to give it a send off.

PARIS.—The fourth exhibition of the Société de la Peinture à l'Eau was certainly one of premier importance, and ought to be taken as the pattern of what a small exhibition should be, both on account of its excellent arrangement and the very high standard maintained among the works exhibited. The Artistes Modernes Gallery holds at the utmost a hundred pictures, and of these

"CRÉPUSCULE" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY GASTON LA TOUCHE

Studio-Talk

the majority were works not only of charming appearance but also highly individualistic in character. M. Lucien Simon has always been a master of water-colour painting, and from the first we have admired the transparency and the liquid quality of those pictures of his in which, with such intense personality, he captures and expresses the most elusive and transitory effects. This year he has really surpassed himself, and to our mind has never before shown himself to be such a master of all the methods of his art, as in his Young Deacons, a study for his picture of last year, or as in the large, low-toned water-colour, Vendredi Saint à Assise. His Promenade sur la Dune brings back the recollection of his Breton pictures with their striking contrasts of colour and their warm and melodious tonality. M. La Touche was no less happy in the work he exhibited, and he sent six water-colours as evidence of his activity during the past months. He was here represented by something reminiscent of all his pet subjects.

His Parc à l'automne is ample proof that he has not abandoned that cycle of pictures through which he arouses in us such deep emotions. This powerful colourist showed also some paintings of Breton fishing boats by moonlight, in which he evinced his perfect comprehension of the art of modulating his tones, and endowing with poetic glamour the subjects of his brush. Besnard, as one knows, manipulates water-colour with the same ease, the same power, and the same charm as he does oil or pastel. At the exhibition we much admired his two delightful little female portraits in fancy dress, round which there seemed to cling something of the fascinating romance which in the eighteenth century was associated with Oriental costume. M. Rouché, the Parisian art collector, the interior of whose house was illustrated in THE STUDIO for January, 1908, has conceived the happy idea of commissioning from Besnard a new decorative panel, Jeunesse, the cartoon for which shows some admirable drawing, as also does the sketch Invocation à Diane. M. Auburtin, who has just held a very remarkable exhibition in a new gallery in the Rue Tronchet, has a style all his own. His water-colours have all the vigour and strength of fresco painting, and at times one can with difficulty believe that these powerful works are done simply upon paper. His Danseuse, his Rhine maidens, are most excellent; his Aigle and his decorative frieze remind us that this artist is also great in the field of decorative art. M. Luigini always gives evidence of a very personal technique; I was much taken with the spirited drawings in which he renders so perfectly aspects of the country-side and the towns of Flanders. The foreigners were extremely well represented in the show. M. Alexander Marcette showed himself the possessor of an ever more exact and sensitive vision; in his Tempête and in his Mouettes he

"L'ESCALIER" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY WALTER GAY

"VENDREDI SAINT À ASSISE." FROM THE WATER-COLOUR BY LUCIEN SIMON

"PROMENADE SUR LA DUNE" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY LUCIEN SIMON

excels in the power of giving an impression of infinity. Nothing was more lively than the Enfants de Marken, by Frantz Charlet. Mlle. Florence Esté makes great progress; her work is carried to a much greater degree of perfection and is vastly surer in drawing. M. Fernand Khnopff showed a large triptych, which, under the title of Souvenir de Bruges d'autrefois, portrays in the centre one of those symbolic women that he delights to draw, and of whose seductive charm he alone holds the secret, while in the panels there are views of the romantic old town. It is a work full of those qualities of thoughtfulness and sensibility which are so characteristic of this rare artist, and it is furthermore an impeccable piece of drawing and painting. Mr. Alfred East was represented by two pictures, both excellent in technique and delightfully harmonious. Mr. Walter Gay charmed us once again by his paintings of interiors, so studied in arrangement and so delicate in colouring.

M. Pierre Gaston Rigaud is an artist, as yet little known, who makes it his endeavour to show us in a series of pictures something of the charm of his own country—the district of the Landes. In this he has succeeded perfectly, and there are good qualities of colour and of composition in his painting. We much liked his picture Les Grands Pins, and certain interiors of churches. He is a clever colourist who decidedly deserves the good word of the Parisian public.

M. R. A. Ullman's work is already known to our readers through the pictures which he sends each year to the Société Nouvelle. In consequence many of the paintings which he showed in one of the rooms at Petit's were familiar to us, but one did not, on that account, appreciate the less his delightful palette of silvery tones, which gives to the slightest of his sketches a most rare preciousness.

Too little is known in France of contemporary German painting. We do not speak of Böcklin, of Klinger, or of Thoma, but of all that young school of Munich and of Düsseldorf, which, while it enjoys on the other side of the Rhine a great reputation, we here ignore completely. It was therefore interesting to see in the Galleries Dewambez the collection of works brought together by the painter Borchardt, among which the work of the following artists was represented : Burger, Hofer, Klossowsky Matthes, Palmié Tewes, Spiro, Vinnen, Weiss, Weissgerber, Mme. Burger, Haller and Voelkerling. We will dismiss from our thoughts certain men whose talents appear to be as yet rather hesitating. For example, M. R. Lévy, whose work is at most a bad edition of Cézanne's, M. Klossowsky, who is often very confused, and M. Hofer, who draws almost too much ; but, on the other hand, there was here some work of very personal and ripe talent. Fritz Burger, who had an imposing portrait of the musician Frey at the piano ; Weissgerber, a young artist of wide knowledge ; Matthes, a charming humorist ; Palmié, from whose diverse palette we have in turn sparkling fantasies of landscapes in winter, spring or autumn ; Spiro, whose Courtisane was a superb study of the nude recalling Manet ; and, lastly, Vinnen, whose three seascapes of the North Sea I have no hesitation in ranking with the best work of this kind. Borchardt was represented by a series of very characteristic landscapes.

Studio-Talk

H. F.

BERLIN. — Max Klinger's warmest admirers have not been able to feel satisfaction in face of his new Brahms monument, exhibited in the gallery of the Secession. When we first catch sight of the figure of a wandering bard in floating cloak, by whose side visionary figures are rising in tragic emotion, the impression is great ; but at closer quarters it is dispelled, and the closer we study the more we feel offended by disproportion and even something approaching to vulgarity of form. We have the uneasy feeling of prying into the struggles of genius with matter, and of seeing all the glories of imagination suppressed by the unyielding marble. On the other hand in Klinger the etcher all the

"SOUVENIR OF BRUGES D'AUTREFOIS" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY FERNAND KHNOPFF

Studio-Talk

qualities of great art impressed us—phantasy, naturalistic exactness, and decorative charm—and we felt besides the ennobling touch of a true classicist.

The Schulte Salon has been showing modern portrait-painting this winter. Joanowicz and Herkomer have given place to A. De la Gandara, the Spanish-Parisian painter, the most brilliant living interpreter of the mondaine lady. He is at his best when the character of his distinguished sitter is expressed in elegant attitude and trailing costume. Only now and then do we seem to get a glimpse of the soul of a modern Salome or Herodias. His poses are mostly of true distinction, but can also be exaggerated, bordering on the unnatural. He loves a subdued colourism, all the blues and pinks softened by pearly greys, and some varnish adds particular sparkle. His beauties generally stand out from a very dark background, or are set against the flowing folds of a mole or fawn coloured velvet curtain. A gallery of his works offers feasts of taste and delights in technical sureness, but it leaves cravings for strength and depth unsatisfied.

At Gurlitt's we were called from dreamland into reality, when we strolled from the pictures of K. Otto Müller to those of Professor Klein-Chevalier. Müller is a young Bohemian who has studied only from nature and from the illustrations of "Jugend." But he has extracted from those sources what his poetical instincts needed. Graceful lines, the tenderness of youthful forms bathed in glaring sunlight, a striving after revelation of beauty, are the inner cravings which his brush betrays. He is still a seeker who will have to study nature intensely before he can quite express his dreams, but it is pleasant to meet such a youth in our time of empiric wisdom. Professor Klein-Chevalier is a painter of facts. Strong, hardy reality claims his brush. He must paint labour, ploughmen and boatmen at work—work that bends the back and swells the sinews. He loves a breezy atmosphere which makes people clutch their hats at the landing-stage or on the seashore. Often he depicts plain, brutal work, but likes at times to intermingle an element of elegance. This touch of refinement characterises also the painter's

DOLLS

BY MARION KAULITZ

Studio-Talk

DOLLS

BY MARION KAULITZ

colourism, his stroke is energetic, and there are juxtapositions of values that occasionally remind one of Zügel. Klein-Chevalier certainly belongs to the group of our rising artists. J. J.

MUNICH.—From time to time there have appeared in the pages of THE STUDIO illustrations of toys designed by one or other Austrian artist designer, and they have evoked widespread interest. Our readers will, we feel sure, find no less attractive the rows of quaint little dolls by Marion Kaulitz which we now reproduce, for they are so true to life and there is something very human about them, especially as compared with the gaudily-dressed poupées with which our toy shops are stocked. Fräulein Kaulitz, who is English on the maternal side, has made it her aim in producing these dolls to make them representative of child nature, and recognising children's love for colour she dresses them in garments of bright hues. Their heads, it should be remarked, have been modelled by the well-known Munich sculptor, Paul Vogelsanger, the faces being coloured by Frl. Kaulitz, but the colour is fast so that the dolls' faces can be washed. The dolls, which are practically unbreakable, have been exhibited here as well as Brunn and Elberfeld, a special diploma being awarded to Frl. Kaulitz at the latter place. The attention which talented artists have been giving of late years to the playthings of our little ones and to many other things touching child life is a gratifying sign of the times, and the movement in this direction, steadily gaining force from year to year, is of the greatest significance.

VIENNA.—Prof. William Unger resigned his chair at the Imperial Academy last year on attaining his seventieth birthday. He migrated to Vienna from Germany as long ago as 1872, and all his best work has been done here. He had, however, already shown his capability as an etcher, but at that time conditions were not favourable for original etching, and for years reproductive etching alone claimed his attention. Still, even as a copyist, he can lay claim to a high rank among those who have done the same thing. His portrait of Rembrandt, after a painting by the master himself (the one with a hat, life size), was a revelation as to the capabilities of the copper-plate and the needle. Soon after he came to Vienna he was commissioned by the late Herr Miethke to make etched reproductions of the great masters in the Vienna galleries for a colossal work on the subject, which was published in 1885, and was a great success. In later years he did the same with other galleries. It is a pity Prof. Unger did not recognise his power as an original etcher sooner. Only comparatively late in life, when etching had gained a better status, did he begin to create, and then he showed himself a master both in black-and-white and in coloured etchings.

EASTER EGGS AS DECORATED BY THE PEASANT WOMEN OF SLAV RACES IN GALICIA AND MORAVIA

A more prolific etcher hardly exists; his plates are legion and include portraits, landscapes, interiors, book-plates, decorative subjects. Not the least part of his claim to fame arises from his eminent qualities as a teacher. Among his past pupils are many who are doing good original work, such as Wesemann, Pontini, Oswald Roux, Ferdinand Lux, Gold, Krizmann, and Schmutzer, his successor at the Academy. Few, indeed, can look back upon so fruitful a life as his—fruitful both as a worker and as a teacher. The etching produced here as a supplement is one of a series of subjects derived from Lovrana, one of the professor's haunts in days gone by A. S. L.

PRAGUE.—In the contemplative life of all Slav tribes a strong and impetuous impulse tends towards decoration. It is, above all, the Slav woman who has through centuries maintained and improved this natural instinct. She not only adorned her garments and those of her family, but also the walls, furniture, dishes and other objects of daily use with those charming ornaments which strike us by their richness of shape and their exuberant display of colour. This peasant art of the old Slavs has declined with the apparently vanishing inventive powers of the population. Only in a few remote villages, far from the industrial centres, is

"A KITCHEN IN LOVRANA." FROM AN ORIGINAL ETCHING
BY WILLIAM UNGER.

Studio-Talk

the old popular art still cherished in the heart of the Slav family.

A branch of this singular ornamentation, whose products have been still preserved in their original style and colour, is that of Easter eggs. The custom of presenting eggs at Easter has nowhere been so much observed as among the Slav races, who, with respect to old customs and habits, are of a rare conservatism. The eggs have their own developed style of decoration, but there is some conformity with the embroideries used in the respective districts. The drawing shows, almost without exception, geometrical and vegetal motives. This ornamentation is quite original, and has been developed in the course of centuries out of the simplest primary types. The apple half has become the apple ornament, the campanula the bell motive, and the tail feathers of the cock the eight-pointed Slav star.

Generally the eggs boast several brilliant colours.

The manner of making up the egg is most interesting, and betokens the special inventive powers of the Slav country-woman. She paints entirely according to her own inspiration on a hen's egg, raw or boiled. While she is drawing, one bright idea after the other assumes form in her fancy, and adding colour to colour she produces spirals, stars and triangles, and presently the finished egg comes forth from out of her hands.

The mode of colouring the egg is more allied to the art of etching than to painting itself. A little receptacle with wax is placed above a lamp, to keep its contents liquid; and this wax is by means of a small pipe applied to the egg in fine stripes and other patterns which are to remain uncoloured. This done, the egg is covered with yellow colour, either with the naked finger-top or with a piece of cloth in which a lump of saffron has been tied up. When the colour has dried, the painter overlays with wax the spots which remain yellow in the finished pattern. Thus our artist draws ornament

"THE ROARING FORTIES;"

BY FREDERICK J. WAUGH

Studio-Talk

after ornament, working with ever-deepening shades. Finally the egg is put into a vessel containing the colour of the ground, a decoction of red brazil-wood, and the bark and berries of the alder, and there it remains two days. Such a carefully treated egg is then dried in a well-tempered oven, so that by means of the heat the colour may coalesce with the fatty matter of the wax and so improve its durability. After a time the eggs are taken out of the oven and carefully wiped. The painter now for the first time sees the result of his or her pains.

HEDWIG SCHANZER.

PHILADELPHIA.—The entire suite of galleries of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, with the exception of the two including the Gibson Collection, has been considered necessary to properly display the assemblage of works of art constituting the One Hundred and Fourth Annual Exhibition. As a consequence of this the four hundred and forty-six oil paintings and the one hundred and eighty pieces of sculpture, by American artists contributing to the show, have a very satisfactory background space, quite free from any appearance of overcrowding.

A superficial glance over the collection impresses one with the fact that portraiture as a form of art is more popular than ever before, and that this particular exhibition does not show any of those remarkable and radical secessions that formerly added so much to the interest and occasionally to the gaiety of the Academy Annuals. Soberness of colour, with a sane regard to qualities of tone and atmosphere as they appear to normal eyes, characterise the majority of the canvases. The catalogue contains a greater proportion of names of local artists than usual, and the representation reflects great credit upon the younger men, many of whom were Academy students.

John S. Sargent's portrait of Miss Townsend occupies a prominent position in the galleries, and shows inimitable skill and dash in the rendering of the peculiar charm of young American womanhood. Irving R. Wiles' portrait of Mrs. James M. Beck is also in quite a different way very successful in

"MAIN STREET BRIDGE, ROCHESTER (N.J.)"

BY COLIN CAMPBELL COOPER

"MOTHER AND CHILD"
BY CHARLES W. HAWTHORNE

Studio-Talk

arriving at the same satisfactory result. Thomas P. Anshutz, of the teaching force of the Academy Schools, shows four well-painted canvases, one of which, entitled A Bird, and another A Study in Scarlet, certainly deserve the highest praise for artistic merit. The Blue Gown, by Alden Weir, and a fine portrait by Philip Hale, should also be mentioned. Gari Melchers' portrait of President Roosevelt in riding costume is simply direct in treatment and virile in execution, reflecting in a way the character of the sitter. The portrait was lent by the Smithsonian Institution of Washington. Lydia Field Emmet, in her portraits of Father and Son, is equally successful in the study of character. Julian Story exposes three portraits, that of William Fisher Lewis, Governor of the State in Schuylkill, being particularly distinguished.

Hugh H. Breckenridge, in a group entitled In the Studio, gives a masterful treatment of colour in the flesh and drapery of the figures of mother and child. Another family group, by Charles W. Hawthorne, is quite delightful for its simple naïveté of pose. Maternity, by Gari Melchers, could hardly be equalled for bold brushwork interesting to the profession and tender in sentiment withal. Cecilia Beaux is represented by three works in portraiture, Mother and Son, lent by Mr. John F. Lewis, being perhaps the most noteworthy. Wm. M. Chase's portraits of Mr. Henry Pepper Vaux and Theodore W. Cramp are creditable examples of his work.

The largest canvas in the exhibition is by Henry O. Tanner, and is a Biblical subject, entitled Behold the Bridegroom Cometh, and shows, what is rarely seen in modern exhibitions, a really serious piece of historical painting, handled in a careful and conscientious way quite refreshing to see. A figure subject by Walter McEwen, entitled Gelderland, should be mentioned as a fine bit of careful painting. Sam and John, by Marie Danforth Page, are interesting studies of the character and amusements of the clever American boy. True to life and irreproachable in drawing and colour is Edmund C. Tarbell's Josephine and Mercie, lent by the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

Fidelity to the painter's technique while unerringly true to the real effect of the winter landscape gives to the works of Edward W. Redfield a place in the first rank of American painters. His contributions, entitled The White House, Hill and Valley, Hill Tops, Quai Gambetta, Boulogne-sur-Mer, show to the greatest advantage the vigour and directness of his methods. W. Elmer Schofield, in The

"GELDERLAND"

BY WALTER MCEWEN

Studio-Talk

"PICARDY MARSHLANDS"

BY HENRY GOLDEN DEARTH

"QUAI GAMBETTA, BOULOGNE"

BY EDWARD W. REDFIELD

Studio-Talk

The Roaring Forties, are splendid examples of this form of art.

The display of sculpture is unusually large and shows much that is novel, and deserves especial notice apart from the rest of the exhibition. Charles Grafly's Head, carved in Italian marble of the purest white, shows the work of the experienced sculptor who knows when to stop short of over-elaboration. Bela T. Pratt shows several works; among them The Fountain of Youth should be particularly mentioned, as also should Chester Beach's nude figure, The Nymph. Unique and in a class by itself is the work of Albert Laessle, a sculptor who devotes himself to the study of the smaller reptiles, such as crabs, frogs and toads. These beautiful bronzes show remarkable patience in the reproduction of their movements and life. Eli Harvey's Bears, in

"THE NYMPH"

BY CHESTER BEACH

Lock and Winter on the Somme, exhibits works that show splendid power of rendering nature as it really is. George de Forest Brush is represented by a Mother and Child (kept by the Corcoran Gallery of Art), a very beautiful and convincing work which will never cease to be interesting. Colin Campbell Cooper, in his Main Street Bridge, Rochester, gives to the picturesque group of buildings a charm quite as great as any landscape could have. Mention should also be made of Philip Little's Among Salem's Old Wharves, Picardy Marshlands by Henry Golden Dearth, The Golden Afternoon by Childe Hassam, Late Spring by Charles Morris Young. A fine marine by Paul Dougherty, The White Tide, and one by Frederick J. Waugh,

LINNAEUS MEDAL

BY ERIK LINDBERG

SMOKING-ROOM IN THE NEW BUILDING OF THE SWEDISH PHYSICIANS' SOCIETY, STOCKHOLM
CARL WESTMAN, ARCHITECT

bronze, performing various tricks are interesting and artistic at the same time.

The Temple Gold Medal was awarded to Frederick P. Vinton for his portrait of Carrol D. Wright, President of Clark College, the Walter Lippincott Prize to Thomas P. Anshutz for his portrait of a young woman entitled The Tanagra, the Jennie Sesnan Medal to Theodore Wendel for Winter at Ipswich, the Mary Smith Prize to Martha Walter for her Portrait, and the Carol H. Beck Gold Medal this year, for the first time, to John Singer Sargent for his portrait of Miss Townsend.

E. C.

STOCKHOLM.—The accompanying illustrations of Erik Lindberg's Linnæus medal, issued by the Swedish Academy in connection with the great Linnæus Festival, call for no special comment, inasmuch as they fully bear out the talented artist's well-known skill in this particular craft.

The house of the Society of Swedish

ENTRANCE TO NEW BUILDING OF THE SWEDISH PHYSICIANS' SOCIETY, STOCKHOLM
CARL WESTMAN, ARCHITECT
SCULPTURE BY K. ERIKSSON

NAZARETH CHURCH, COPENHAGEN

CHURCH OF ST. AUSGARIUS, ODENSE SCULPTURE BY THOMAS BÄRENTZEN

Studio-Talk

Physicians, built from the designs of Mr. Carl Westman, in its old-time, self-contained simplicity, is undoubtedly one of the best modern buildings in Stockholm. It is built of red brick, a material but rarely used in the Swedish capital, at least in more monumental buildings; and yet red brick, properly applied, possesses a very distinct and picturesque charm, a fact to which many Danish architects have testified in their recent work. M. Westman's house is roomy (the Swedes love plenty of elbow-room), well designed and proportioned throughout, from the large lecturing-hall to the cosy smoke-room—altogether a delightful club-house, possessed both of homeliness and of that serene dignity which befits the profession, portraits of some of the most famous members of which, including the great Linnæus, hewn in granite, by Kristian Eriksson, ornament the main entrance, which is depicted on page 247. A corner of the smoke-room is also shown. G. B.

COPENHAGEN
—The sculptured work at the entrance of the church of St. Augarius, Odense (Niels Jacobsen, architect), illustrated on the opposite page, is by Thomas Barentzen, and represents Christ as the Conciliator. To the right the angel is seen driving out Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden, whilst to the left the angel is welcoming the blessed spirits. The other illustration shows the frontage of Nazareth Church (Mr. Nybølle, architect), with a sculptured frieze by Mr. Barentzen. It represents two processions moving towards the central statue of Christ. To the left we see the Promise, the principal figures of the Old Testament; and to the right the New Testament, with the apostles and others.

Mr. Barentzen, who is a fervent lover of Italy and her art, does not seem to sympathise with the extreme modern evolutions within the world of sculpture; he prefers more academic lines, and has a happy sense of decorative harmony, which has often demonstrated itself not only in sculpture, but also in silver-ware and other metal work. G. B.

MELBOURNE, VICTORIA.—Mr. Hans Heysen has established for himself a reputation as one of the foremost landscape painters Australia has yet produced. A native of South Australia, he was early recognised as a youth of promise, and by the aid of friends he was enabled to go to Paris to complete his studies. Since his return he has devoted himself solely to the study of Australian landscape, and the results of his zeal were to be

“A LORD OF THE BUSH”

BY HANS HEYSEN

"A MIDSUMMER MORNING" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY HANS HEYSEN

seen in a collection of works numbering about 130, which he exhibited not long ago at the Melbourne Guildhall—oil paintings, water-colours, pastels and monotypes. Especially notable are his fine water-colours of Venice and Sydney Harbour, and among his oil paintings, the mysterious Moonlight (a study in reduced colour), Timber Hauling, Way Home (both remarkable for their rich coloration and vigorous brushwork), and the two works now reproduced, which have been acquired by the Victorian National Gallery under the Felton Bequest.

J. S.

ART SCHOOL NOTES.

LONDON.—At the Royal Academy Schools the publication in March of the list of subjects for the prize competitions is always awaited with interest, especially in the "great" years of which the present is one. A "great" year is a year in which are awarded the biennial gold medals and travelling studentships for historical painting, sculpture and architecture, and for these prizes, each of which is of the value of £200, the contest is naturally very keen. These competitions were instituted exactly a hundred and forty years ago, when Mauritius Lowe, the friend of Dr. Johnson, gained the medal for painting, John Bacon, afterwards R.A., for sculpture, and James Gandon for architecture. Among the artists who have since carried off the medals for painting or sculpture are Thomas Banks, John Hoppner, John Soane, Samuel Joseph, Daniel Maclise, J. C. Hook, J. E. Millais, Frank Holl, Harry Bates, Mr. Thomas Brock, Mr. Hamo Thornycroft, Mr. Frank Dicksee, Mr. H. H. La Thangue, Mr. T. Stirling Lee, Mr. F. G. Cotman, Mr. J. E. Christie, Miss Jessie Macgregor, Madame Canziani, Mr. F. W. Pomeroy, Sir George Frampton, Mr. W. Goscombe John, Mr. Melton Fisher, Mr. Mouat Loudan, Mr. F. Derwent Wood, Mr. Horace B. Fisher, Mr. A. T. Nowell, Mr. H. J. Draper, Mr. Ralph Peacock, and Mr. Harold Speed.

The subjects set this year for the competitions for the gold medals in painting, sculpture and architecture are respectively: "Dives and Lazarus," "The Expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise," and "A Nobleman's Mansion in a Large Park, with Garden Terraces down to the River." Episodes in the story of Adam and Eve and designs for the houses of noblemen have frequently been subjects in the gold medal competitions of the past; but "Dives and Lazarus" figures in the list for the first time. It is a capital subject, and equally good is the one chosen for the competition for the prize of £40 for a design for the decoration of a portion of a public building, "A Hunting Scene, Mediæval or Classical." This is to be designed to fill a given space in the refreshment room at the Royal Academy, and if the work of the successful student is considered sufficiently meritorious, he may be invited to execute it at the cost of the Academy. The subject for the Turner Gold Medal and Scholarship of £50 is "Fishing Boats Making for Safety in a Gale," and for the Creswick Prize of £30, "The Bole of an Oak Tree with a Wooded Landscape Background." The cartoon prize of £25 and a silver medal is offered this year for a drawing in chalk or charcoal, life-size, of "A Female Allegorical Figure of Winter." Many other prizes for drawing, painting, modelling, and design are included in the list, and the sum-total of the money awards, including scholarships, exceeds £1,000. This, however, is less than the sum-total of the prize list in a "great" year previous to the reorganization of the schools in 1904.

Art School Notes

Mr. Seymour Lucas, R.A., will be the visitor during May in the School of Drawing at the Royal Academy. Mr. Henry Woods, R.A., will visit the School of Painting, Mr. Hamo Thornycroft, R.A., the School of Sculpture, and Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A., the School of Architecture.

London, South, West, and North, has been the birthplace of some of our greatest painters, sculptors, and designers, and Hogarth first saw the light in the City itself; but for some reason, difficult of explanation, the Eastern division of the Metropolis is almost destitute of artistic tradition. It is believed that Hoppner was born in Whitechapel, and certainly William Morris was a native of Walthamstow, and these are possibly the only artists of high rank that the East has produced. Some explanation of this paucity may perhaps be found in the artistic neglect of the district until modern times. Whitechapel was quick enough to appreciate good pictures when they first made their appearance at the excellent Art Gallery, and the establishment of art schools in East London has brought forth students as intelligent and sympathetic as any of their Western brethren. Proofs of this were to be seen last month in the work shown by the students of the art school, directed by Mr. Arthur Legge, R.B.A., at the West Ham Technical Institute, on the evening of the annual conversazione. The students' taste and skill were shown too in the tableaux vivants, in which pictures by Albert Moore, Mr. Blair Leighton, Mr. Edgar Bundy, and Mr. J. H. F. Bacon, A.R.A., were admirably reproduced with scenery painted by Mr. P. Willats and Mr. A.

"FRIENDLY CRITICS"

BY MISS CONSTANCE L. JENKINS
(Melbourne National Gallery School: see page 253)

Art School Notes

Colley. The tableaux also included living reproductions of the statuary of Onslow Ford, Mr. Hamo Thornycroft, and Mr. Mervyn Lawrence, who is the modelling master at West Ham. Mr. Legge, who is assisted by Mr. Alfred Bourton, makes a point of insisting that his students should work at home as well as at the school. The home work may be more imperfect than that done under the master's eye, but its execution makes the student think for himself, and if any of the designs brought by him to the school are above the average in merit he is encouraged to carry them out. The course of study at West Ham includes the application of art to such crafts as metal work and enamelling, under Mr. Walter Stoye; wood-carving, under Mr. G. W. Redmond, and embroidery, under Mrs. Legge. The architectural class, under Mr. W. Godfrey, is believed to be the only one in London east of Aldgate. At the conversazione excellent work in various departments of the arts and crafts was shown by Mr. Percy Willats, Mr. Dyer, Miss H. Jacobs, Miss P. M. Legge, Mr. Stanley Lefaux, Miss Shilling, and Mr. H. Willis.

Mr. W. Frank Calderon's new methods of demonstrating the anatomy of the horse should be of value to the student of animal painting. As a rule in the larger art schools, the anatomy lectures are given by a surgeon whose knowledge of the subject is naturally more comprehensive than that of any layman. Unfortunately the surgeon does not always appreciate the points that alone are useful to the student of external form, and sometimes bewilders him with technicalities beyond the range of painters' or sculptors' anatomy. Mr. Calderon is a painter who has made equine and canine anatomy his special study, and his demonstrations, recently given for the first time at the School of Animal Painting, were remarkable for their clearness and simplicity. With the skeleton of a horse before him, Mr. Calderon in his opening address explained the construction and characteristics of the bony form, and then, by a method of his own, proceeded to clothe the skeleton bit by bit with ligaments of wax and muscles of some red flexible substance, pointing out as he did so how and where each one joined the bone and its effect on the motion of the particular limb under discussion. Side by side with the skeleton was a coloured diagram of a horse, life size, with muscles and ligaments exposed, and the name of each written upon it, and every student was provided with a similar diagram on a small scale. On both diagrams the bones that show on the surface of the animal were carefully indicated. The School of Animal Painting in Baker Street is rich in anatomical casts and specimens, many of which were prepared in its class rooms by Dr. Armstead and Mr. Calderon in conjunction. It may interest some to know that within a few hundred yards of the school, lived and died the famous animal painter and anatomist, George Stubbs, A.R.A., whose original drawings, made to illustrate his well-known book on the horse, are in the possession of the Royal Academy.

Mr. J. H. F. Bacon, A.R.A., who distributed the prizes last month at the Putney School of Art, paid a well-deserved compliment to the head-master, Mr. J. Bowyer, and his staff. He said that so much slovenly work was done nowadays in art schools, that it was a real pleasure to him to see the care and thoroughness of the studies shown at Putney. Mr. Bowyer, in his report, was able to show a steady increase of students, and some excellent results in the winning of prizes and scholarships. One of the highest awards at the disposal of the Board of Education, a National Scholarship of £100 for drawing and painting, had been gained by a Putney student, Mr. Edward A. Waite, and a number of medals and prizes had been carried off in the National Art Competition. Sir William Lancaster, who took the chair at the prize distribution, amused the students by his quaint description of the way a "lightning impressionist" had made the portrait of him that he unrolled for the inspection of the audience. The work by students shown in the room included, in addition to the regular art school work, some specimens of pottery—the first efforts of the newly-founded pottery class, under Mr. Irvine Bately—and examples of woodcarving and embroidery. The studies of "The Lion in Art," for which Mr. G. F. Rhead was awarded a silver medal in the National Art Competition, were of their kind as good as they could be. Miss Enid Ledward, who won Sir William Lancaster's prize for book illustration, exhibited some sympathetic studies of children in black and white and colour that give promise of better things to come later on in the young artist's career, and the cushion cover with which Miss Hilda W. E. B. Hartt gained the Council's prize for embroidery, was the best of several good pieces of needlework, contributed by Miss B. Edwards, Miss M. Guy, Miss G. Brooke and others. A National Bronze medal was gained by Mr. W. H. Howland, National Book prizes by

Reviews and Notices

Miss Edith M. Bennett, Mr. Robert J. Swan, and Mr. Leonard Wingate, and London County Council Scholarships were awarded to Miss Enid Ledward, Mr. G. F. Rhead, Mr. Stanley W. Hogbin and Mr. John S. Wood. Local and Council prizes, in addition to those already mentioned, were gained by Mr. Frederick Byrne, Mr. Leonard Wingate, Miss Constance Lang, Mr. W. H. Broad, Miss Elsie Redsull, Mr. Walton Burridge, Miss Lena Priestley, Mr. Reginald E. Clark, and Miss Fannie Newnham. Two students, Miss Edith M. Bennett and Mr. Robert J. Swan, passed the entrance examination to the Royal Academy schools.

The Gilbert-Garret Sketch Club held an exhibition last month in the club room in Great Ormond Street, which is said to have been used formerly by Toole as a rehearsal room. The club is responsible for the arrangement of the annual Gilbert-Garret sketch competition in which most of the London students' clubs take part, and several works that had figured in recent competitions were to be seen upon the walls. Of the more ambitious studies Mr. J. McWilson's oil picture in a grey-blue key of a river nymph standing in shallow water, and the clever painting by Mr. Vernon Pearce of a lady in outdoor dress, were the most notable. The landscapes included a sympathetic study of Trees and Sunshine by Mr. J. Allister Heir; Saltings, Rye, by Mr. F. Grey, in which the recession of the flat country was capitally suggested, and good sketches by Mr. A. H. Webb and Mr. Charles Ince.

W. T. W.

MELBOURNE.—Great interest centred in the Melbourne National Gallery Students' exhibition this year from the fact that the triennial travelling scholarship of £150 per annum was to be awarded. The leading students were Miss Constance Jenkins, Miss Cumbrae Stewart and Mr. Wm. M'Innes, and the award fell to the first-named student for her picture entitled Friendly Critics. This is the first time the travelling scholarship has ever fallen to a lady competitor, and Miss Jenkins is to be congratulated on the fact. This year students have been allowed to select their own subjects, whereas in previous years they had to paint to fit a set title. Miss Stewart's work also deserves honourable mention. The life class work of the painting school was of an unusually high standard, but in the black-and-white section a slight falling off was noticeable. Mr. M'Innes and Mr. Lorimer were the chief exponents of this medium. J. S.

REVIEWS AND NOTICES.

John Pettie, R.A., H.R.S.A. By MARTIN HARDIE. (London: Adam & Charles Black.) 20s. net.—Fifteen years after Pettie's death, this monograph on one of the most distinguished of nineteenth-century Scottish artists appears. The lapse of time has undoubtedly placed difficulties in the author's way in dwelling much on the personal note, but enough has been stated to give the reader some conception of the bright and breezy, energetic and warm-hearted character of one who, in addition to being a great painter, was in many respects a typical Scot. The incidents of the early life at East Linton and in Edinburgh, when, in conjunction with Orchardson, Chalmers, and McTaggart, the first steps were on the ladder that was to carry each of them to fame, will be read with great interest. The writer tells an amusing story of Pettie and McTaggart obtaining the permission of the Artillery Officer at Edinburgh Castle Half Moon Battery to help fire the Royal Salute on the day of the 1860 review of Volunteers in Holyrood Park, a review which formed the subject of one of Sam Bough's famous paintings. Mr. Hardie has also a story to tell about the painting of the celebrated portrait of Mr. Campbell Noble in Noble's studio at Coldingham, and there are various other interesting incidents recorded which help to an understanding of the man. When the author writes of his uncle's work as an artist, he does so with a commendable personal detachment. The book is profusely illustrated by reproductions in colour of almost all of Pettie's principal pictures, and the catalogue of his works is not the least valuable portion of the volume. It shows that Pettie was an indefatigable worker, not a year passing, from 1860 till his death, without the production of several important subject pictures in addition to portraiture and other work.

Dutch Art in the Nineteenth Century. By HERMINE MARIUS. Translated by ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS. (London: The De La More Press.) 15s. net. The Art of the Netherlands Galleries. By DAVID C. PREYER. (George Bell & Sons.) 6s. net. Great Masters of Dutch and Flemish Painting. By W. BODE. Translated by MARGARET L. CLARKE. (Duckworth & Co.) 7s. 6d. net.—That three good books on Dutch painting should appear simultaneously—each, it is to be feared, to the detriment of the other two—is a striking illustration of the keen competition in the literary market. Of these the best is perhaps the one from the pen of Hermine

Reviews and Notices

Marius, but it is unfortunately considerably spoiled by the inadequacy of the translation, which throughout retains a foreign ring. Beginning with a brief review of the prosaic eighteenth century, so barren of art production in Holland, the author gives a most eloquent account of the great revival of painting in the nineteenth century, inaugurated by Israels and Jongkind and carried on by Mesdag, Mauve, the brothers Maris and others less celebrated. Due consideration is also given to the Romanticists, of whom Ary Scheffer was the chief, and to the minor interpreters of genre and landscape subjects, but it is in the chapters on the great Hague School that the interest of the volume culminates. Mr. Preyer's book is more than a mere guide to the collections of paintings in Holland, for though it will be found of great use in that direction, its preliminary chapters give a very clear and critical account of Dutch painting, from the beginning of the seventeenth century to the present day, in which he aptly defines the qualities distinguishing the work of one master from another, as well as those that set the art of the Low Countries, apart from that of any other country. The opinions of the scholarly Dr. Bode will always command respect, but some of those expressed in the work before us will challenge contradiction, notably his dictum that the masterstroke of Rembrandt was to bring the Bible story into this everyday world, "that Franz Hals did not always overcome the actual material properties inherent in colour as a pigment," and that Pieter de Hooch, most individual of interpreters of genre, was a connecting link between Nicolas Maas and Jan Vanmeer. There is, moreover, a certain want of proportion in the book, more space being given Segers and Brouwer than to all the Flemish Masters. It is of course only in Holland itself that Dutch painting can be studied as a whole, but with the aid of the excellent reproductions of pictures in the three volumes under notice some idea may be obtained of the remarkable continuity of aim of the successive exponents of every branch of art, portraiture excepted, for whereas Israels, Mauve and their great contemporaries have nobly carried on the old traditions, Rembrandt and Hals have had no true successors.

Nature and Ornament. By LEWIS F. DAY, with over 350 illustrations from drawings by Miss FOORD. (London: B. T. Batsford.) 5s. net.—In his "Nature and Ornament" the well-known artist craftsman Mr. Lewis Day goes to the very root of the matter, for though he considers vegetable growth as the raw material of design, giving in the numerous illustrations specially drawn for his book, typical examples of that raw material, he shows that in really successful ornament, nature plays a secondary, sometimes even an obscure, part, the beauty of the latter being really in proportion to its fulfilment of conditions which have nothing to do with nature. The motto of his book is "Ornament for its own sake," and throughout the lesson he preaches is the submission of natural form to ornament, not the subordination of ornament to nature. He points out the fallacy of Ruskin's reasoning on the subject, and even dares to challenge Morris's dictum that "ornament should tell a story or call up memories of nature," declaring that "when it came to designing he was better than his word and adding, it was always a hint from nature which set him going, but the way he departed from nature shows that when once he got to work he lost sight of nature, and kept always in view the problem of design."

The English House. By W. SHAW SPARROW. (London: Eveleigh Nash.) 10s. 6d. net.—Mr. Sparrow's aim has been to supply a want—to write a book for the plain man as opposed to the student of architecture. He traces the history of the house and home from its earliest origin, through its various stages of development in England up to the present day, discussing it mainly, it is true, from the architectural standpoint, but with an endeavour to eliminate as far as possible the technicalities of the subject. He has much to say, and says it in an interesting manner, but on page 70 he makes a statement that is certainly open to challenge, where he says "the desire to live was far stronger during the middle ages than it is to-day." To infer this from the development of the cumbersome body armour worn in those days is as though one were to say that we build armour-plated vessels to-day because we are more tenacious of life than were the seamen of Elizabethan times, or that greater bravery was shown by those who went into battle in the wooden ships of Nelson's days than by the crews of our modern Dreadnoughts. The illustrations are admirably chosen for their bearing on the letterpress and are numerous and well reproduced, though one does not find much here that is new.

Greek Dress. By ETHEL B. ABRAHAMS, M.A. (London: John Murray.) 9s. net.—This scholarly and well-illustrated volume is an extension of a thesis approved for the degree of Master of Arts at the London University. In it the eloquent writer, after passing in brief review the Hellenic garments, as illustrated by the draped figures found at Knossos and Setsofa, and engraved Mycenæan gems, etc., traces the evolution of Greek dress, noting how thoroughly in accord it was from first to last with the noble race to whom the human form divine was the highest expression of ideal beauty, and the cultivation of physical powers a religious duty. Quoting largely from original authorities, but giving excellent translations for the benefit of those less learned than herself, and pressing into service, as illustrations, statues, bas-reliefs, painted vases, embroideries, etc., Miss Abrahams gives the fullest details, not only as to form and ornamentation but texture and colour of material, devoting, as is but fitting, considerable space to the golden age of Greek art to which belonged the maidens who posed for the marvellous sculptures of the Parthenon, and noting the gradual introduction of excessive luxury resulting from constant intercourse with the East, and the reaction that set in after the Persian wars.

Reviews and Notices

La Galleria d'Arte Moderna di Venezia. Text by VITTORIO PICA. (Bergamo: Istituto Italiano d'Arti grafiche.) 50 lire.—Founded in 1897, the Gallery of Modern Art at Venice, of which this sumptuous volume forms a fitting memorial, was the immediate outcome of the institution of those international art exhibitions which have been held in that city every second year since 1895. It will always redound to the credit of Prince Alberto Giovannelli and other generous benefactors whose support, with that liberally given by the Municipality and other authorities, enabled the gallery to be established, that they had the wisdom to see what was needed to infuse new life into Italian art; for as Sgr. Pica observes in his opening remarks, it is to the movement initiated in Venice fourteen years ago that contemporary art in Italy has been saved from utter decay. Sgr. Pica has watched this movement from the beginning, and from 1899 onwards has published a record of each exhibition, so that he may be considered par excellence the historian of the movement. And that there can be few or none who are better qualified than he to discharge this function, is amply attested by the series of essays he has written for this volume as an accompaniment to the reproductions of works which have been acquired by the Gallery. The volume contains eighty of these reproductions, a large number of them being in colour. The works reproduced have no doubt in nearly all cases been purchased at one or other of the biennial exhibitions, and their authors are well-known artists belonging to many nationalities, the Italians naturally predominating among the fifty-two who are represented in the volume. Nearly all the plates are neatly mounted on dark paper, and the general excellence of printing and binding entitles the publishers to warm congratulation.

The Architectural Association Sketch-book. Third Series. Vol. XII. Edited by G. B. Lewis and Theodore Fyfe. (Published by the Association at 18 Tufton Street, Westminster.) £1 1s. (to subscribers). The 72 plates contained in this latest volume of the "Sketch-book" cover a wide range of subjects of much interest and value to the student of architecture. Of the 37 plates devoted to English subjects, the principal concern Castle Hedingham in Essex, the Priory Church at Christchurch, Hants, the Royal Naval Hospital, Greenwich, the contributors of these being Messrs. C. C. Brewer, G. J. Coombs, C. J. Macdonald and C. H. B. Quennell. Italian architecture occupies 18 plates, the Massini Palace with the columns in Rome and the church of S. Maria Maggiore at Toscanella being the chief subjects. In France the church of Notre Dame, Caudebec, is the subject of five plates contributed by Messrs. C. Wontner-Smith and A. E. Martin. Belgium, Holland, Greece, Spain and Turkey are also represented, the last by an interior view of St. Sophia and two views of the mosque of Sultan Sulieman, Constantinople, by Mr. A. E. Henderson.

Designers to whom lettering has an attraction will be glad to learn that a new and much cheaper edition of Turbayne's well-known book of Mono-grams and Cyphers has been issued by Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack, of London and Edinburgh. The re-issue forms a single volume, and the price is only 5s. net in paper wrappers, and 7s. 6d. net, bound in cloth, as against 37s. previously charged for the complete work.

The Annual Plate of the Art Union of London consists this year of a large and fine etching by Mr. M. Osborne, A.R.E., after the painting by Fred Morgan entitled The Gleaners. The plate is one of considerable merit, and cannot fail to be appreciated by the subscribers to this excellent institution.

Mr. Edmund H. New, who is making a special study of the architecture of Oxford, has executed a pen-and-ink drawing of The Towers of Oxford, as seen from the Bell Tower of Magdalen College; and the drawing has been reproduced and printed in lithography by Mr. T. R. Way. From the point selected by the artist, all the towers for which Oxford is so famous come into view, except, of course, Magdalen Tower itself, and the result is a panoramic representation of much interest.

The Lay Figure

THE LAY FIGURE: ON FASHIONS IN CRITICISM.

"How little sense or reason there is now in what is called art criticism," sighed the Plain Man. "Most of it seems to me to be quite unintelligible and to be absolutely useless educationally."

"I hope you do not consider my criticisms unintelligible," laughed the Art Critic, "for I can assure you that I intend them to be most instructive and to explain all sorts of things that people ought to know."

"No, I did not refer to you," returned the Plain Man, "because you do say things that it is possible to understand. What I complain of is the extraordinary absence of agreement among art critics now about the principles of art: everyone who writes on the subject seems to have some fad of his own to advocate, and in the multitude of fads art disappears entirely."

"You do not realise," broke in the Man with the Red Tie, "that art criticism has got out of the old stupid rut in which it travelled years ago, and has become a living thing. You are old fashioned and you like listening to platitudes; new ideas puzzle you, so you say they are unintelligible and you call them fads."

"It is not the new idea that puzzles me," answered the Plain Man, "but the fact that no two people who write on art hold the same opinion. They tell us that everything that we have been accustomed to hitherto is all wrong, but none of them agrees about the line we ought to take for the future."

"That simply proves that modern criticism is alive," cried the Man with the Red Tie; "people think about art now and realise in how many ways it can be expressed. They do not reduce it to rule and make it a matter of convention."

"I admit that sounds very nice," interrupted the Critic, "but really it does not mean anything. Acceptance of standards in art criticism does not involve the following of a convention, and if there are no standards there can be no stability of opinion. That is just the trouble at the moment; things are advocated simply because they are new, not because they are in any way improvements upon what has gone before."

"But the love of what is new implies a desire for progress," objected the Man with the Red Tie, "and progress should always be encouraged."

"Not necessarily," replied the Critic. "You must first of all explain what you mean by progress. To destroy existing standards, simply because you do not appreciate their value or understand their meaning, is only to produce incoherence. The love of change is not a healthy one unless the change leads you to something better than you have had before."

"That is just what I say," cried the Plain Man; "we have become incoherent and our critics have become unintelligible. We have lost our old standards and we have no new ones. Why is this?"

"Well, as far as I can see it is simply because fashions in criticism have changed," replied the Critic. "Years ago the fashion was to uphold what was customary and to attack everything that was new—now everything that has hitherto been accepted as correct is ridiculed as obsolete, and every new fad is put forward as a discovery of world-shaking importance. There is no sense in it; it is only a new fashion."

"But if it is only a new fashion why has it been so universally adopted?" asked the Man with the Red Tie. "It must be founded on common-sense to secure such general acceptance."

"By no means," laughed the Critic; "common-sense is the last thing upon which a fashion is ever founded. If you want my real opinion I should say that the foundation of this fashion is the ignorance of the men who pretend to be critics. They have no standards in art, they have not even any knowledge of artistic practice in the wide sense, and consequently they are blown about by every wind of doctrine. They acquire all their opinions at second hand, and merely repeat parrot-fashion what they are told to say. They are not critics but advocates, and act as mouthpieces of this or that art clique."

"Then you argue that modern criticism is not independent?" asked the Man with the Red Tie.

"Of course it is not independent," replied the Critic. "The man who follows a fashion can never be independent. The real critic is a judge who views impartially all the aspects of the case submitted to him, not an advocate who holds a brief for one side and abuses the other. The modern critic is a lop-sided person who is incapable of exercising any judicial functions, and who is mortally afraid of being impartial lest the party by which he has been hired should accuse him of being old-fashioned and take away his job. He is not allowed by his masters to study anything except what they prescribe, and his position depends upon his obedience. Thrust into a position to which he is not in any way entitled, there is not the least doubt that he does more harm than good to art."

THE LAY FIGURE.

Wood Panels by William Fuller Curtis

Owned by Cosmos Club, Washington, D. C.

SEA FAIRIES, PANEL ON WOOD
IN COLORS WITH BURNT OUTLINES

BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS

WOOD PANELS BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS

THE possibilities in working on wood with a heated needle are illustrated anew in the group of exhibits by William Fuller Curtis which have recently been on view in New York and elsewhere. Mr. Curtis does not, to be sure, confine himself to the pyrographic point; his panels are carved and colored as well. By these means he obtains a low relief in several planes. Profiles and vigorous outlines are brought out by deeply incising the wood, so that a shadow results. The coloring may be delicate or brilliant, according to the needs of the subject.

In the panel entitled Sea Fairies, which is the property of the Cosmos Club in Washington, D. C., the lines of algæ and weed are emphasized with burning. The colors of the water are laid on with tints of water color. For the brilliant scales of the fish mineral colors, richer in glint, have been used. An interesting advantage has been taken of the grain of the wood for aiding in the conventional representation of water seen below the surface. The general vivacity of the design gains by the exuberant display of the bubbles of air freed from the uncouth mouths, as these fish circle and pass.

In the carved and burnt wood panel, The Angel of the Darker Drink, Mr. Curtis sets himself to a theme which carries the impress of Vedder, but modified with a contrasted suggestion of full summer growth in the maple leaf and grain. The over-

Owned by Edward Lind Morse, Esq., Washington, D. C.

THE ANGEL OF THE DARKER DRINK
CARVED AND BURNT-WOOD PANEL

BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS

Wood Panels by William Fuller Curtis

mantel owned by Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey Bury, Wilcot Manor, shows the effective use of bold contrasts of tone which this medium, or merging of mediums, offers. Variation in surface under the carving-tool intensifies the contrast of depth produced by burning, as in the neighboring surfaces here of hood and flesh.

In the pencil drawings for the panels owned by Mr. Robert Dix Benson, Passaic, two features of Mr. Curtis's work are illustrated, his pleasure in handling the point and his taste for antiquarian detail. Many of his designs show a disposition for picturing the costume and manners of earlier times. In pencil drawing itself he has exhibited a number of interesting portraits, including those of Mr. David Bispham and Mr. William J. Hurlburt, and another of the late Charles Eliot Norton, who sat to the artist in the summer studio at Ashfield, Mass.

Mr. Curtis has good decorative sense and has

Owned by Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey Bury, Wilcot Manor, Wilts, England

OVERMANTEL

CARVED AND BURNT-WOOD PANEL

BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS

developed his use on wood of the cutting edge, the burning point and applied colors until the effectiveness of his panels should command attention in many and various schemes of interior decoration.

Finished Work owned by Robert Dix Benson, Esq., Passaic, N. J.

THE COMING OF ARTHUR (PENCIL DRAWING)

BY WILLIAM FULLER CURTIS

LXXIV

Stereoscope in Art Instruction

THE STEREOSCOPE AS AN AID IN ART INSTRUCTION
BY W. MARTIN JOHNSON
PRESIDENT, W. MARTIN JOHNSON SCHOOL OF ART

THE principal difficulty in learning to draw objectively seems to lie in the inability of a beginner to appreciate the three dimensions in nature. Height and breadth are readily perceived, and the majority of pupils can be taught to copy other drawings, but the expression of thickness upon a flat surface is not so easily accomplished. It may be that the varying and subtle conditions of light and shade confuse the student, or, perhaps, it is because the untrained eye cannot eliminate unessential details in a model. However, as the purpose of graphic art is to portray nature in a realistic manner, pictures must have in them the effects of relief, space and perspective. The draughtsman who acquires the habit of closing one eye while drawing fails to secure these qualities in his work. But some people do not miss them, because they look at nature indifferently and do not realize that they have been given two eyes for purposes other than to safeguard against danger. With normal sight and both eyes open we see things with space between and around them and at their true distances when in the same line of vision. We are not dependent, therefore, upon mental deductions based upon relative size and light and shade to perceive these conditions. The two eyes explain to us that we are in the midst of and a component of our surroundings, not mere spectators of a panorama.

There is an ingenious contrivance called a range finder used aboard war vessels to measure the distance between ship and target. It is in principle the same as two eyes, but the observation stations are widely separated. While the space between our own eyes is insignificant compared to that necessary for the two points of view in the scientific instrument, still they see two unlike and distinct images in precisely the same way, which, when combined in the brain, reveal objects detached from each other and in relief against their backgrounds. The importance of this sense an art student does not at first appreciate, and it requires some explanation by an instructor to make him understand its significance in art.

Stereoscopic photographs, however, in contrast to ordinary photographs, throw objects into relief as seen with two eyes and, furthermore, give one a proper conception of the natural size of the objects photographed. In a photograph taken with one lens all things are flat against each other, but a stereoscopic camera has two lenses the same distance apart as the eyes.

Now, to make a pupil observe should be the primary aim of instruction in drawing and painting. If this can be accomplished by any means, mechanical or otherwise, a good beginning has been made in the art.

Although the stereoscopic photograph in monochrome is imperfect, because it does not give a complete representation of nature, the Lumiere process of photographing true color values stereoscopically removes the last obstacle in the way of placing before the student exact reproductions of valuable artistic material otherwise not available.

The student can thus have constantly at hand in permanent and convenient form the best models that the world affords—the most interesting still-life groupings, the rarest flowers, costumes, landscapes or animals. In fact, the stereoscope can do for art what the phonograph has done for music.

Students find the reversion from stereoscopic copies to unaided vision in no way confusing, but, on the contrary, a decided help in fixing proportions in the memory, because there is no movement or changing light to divert the attention. Drawing furnishes the mind with clearly defined images with which the artist expresses ideas, just as certain symbols combined make words.

Facility in drawing should be such that the act becomes subconscious, as one writes a letter; for without the dexterity which only comes with complete mastery of tools no one can draw or paint with spontaneity. It is the greater art to conceal an art.

By copying charts and diagrams a student really accomplishes little. Even if he becomes proficient in the exercises, embarrassment and confusion result directly he approaches nature, and nature study is absolutely essential. Artistic knowledge is invariably based upon this sound foundation.

In the early stages of practice it is difficult to maintain enthusiasm on the part of the pupil, and encouragement is oftentimes more efficacious than criticism. By alternating study from casts or actual objects with that from the stereographs in color the teacher of drawing and painting will stimulate a greater interest in a student's work and obtain a far better result and more rapid progress than by the older methods.

W. M. J.

THE brass tray shown on page c of the January INTERNATIONAL STUDIO was the work of Mrs. Clara Woodford, of the Grand Rapids School of Applied Arts, the other objects being the work of Mrs. Wurzburg and Mrs. Bliss.

"Have nothing in your houses that you do not know to be useful, or believe to be beautiful."—WILLIAM MORRIS.

The National Society of Home Art and Decoration

The purposes of this society are as follows:

1. To secure the adoption by building contractors, architects and owners of better standards of design and decoration in the average American homes, city, village and country.
2. To induce the manufacturers of all decorative materials used in American homes to raise the standard of design in their product; and to urge them to cooperate more fully with the architect, contractor and owner along ideal decorative lines.
3. To urge the study of the principles of home art, architecture and decoration in schools and educational organizations.
4. To take part in the exhibitions of architectural and arts and crafts societies, with a view to the assembling of designs and examples bearing upon the subject.
5. To conduct through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO a department of suggestions to readers and members of the society, and also to conduct an established inquiry department, through which, by publication or personal replies, information bearing in any way upon the subject may be readily secured in so far as expert authorities and careful consideration can supply it.

6. To keep members informed concerning publications and exhibitions, through the columns of THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO, and the bulletins and publications that the society may be called upon to issue.

7. To cooperate with local clubs and associations in supplying exhibitions, lectures, lantern slides, etc.

An advisory committee of eminent specialists will shortly be elected, and their services invited in their several capacities.

For information concerning MEMBERSHIP, apply to the Treasurer, Mr. Pendleton Dudley, 34 Pine Street, New York.

A PLAN FOR A HOUSE WHICH IS PRACTICAL AND COMPACT, WITH COMFORT, CONVENIENCE AND ATTRACTIVE INTERIOR

A SMALL HOUSE OF MODERATE COST—THE FINISHING

AS IT is the purpose of the National Society of Home Art and Decoration to offer through these columns practical suggestions on the planning, finishing, decorating and furnishing of the home, we are presenting above the tentative plan of a small house of moderate cost. The finish, decoration and fitting of this house will be treated in successive numbers, and the suggestions offered will be such as are applicable to many of the houses of moderate cost which are designed to-day.

The plan of this house is practical and compact, and makes for the comfort and convenience which insure an attractive interior. The central living-room, extending the depth of the house, is spacious and of good proportions, the comparatively low ceiling being characteristic of the bungalow, the type of house after which this is designed. In utilizing this plan the exterior may be of concrete, siding or shingles, but the long roof line, French and casement windows, the sunken porch and the flagged or grassed court at the rear must be retained to preserve the artistic values.

The frankly undecorated simplicity of the constructive materials in both the exterior and interior of the building is an important factor of its charm.

The standing woodwork may be of ash, chestnut, yellow pine or some other inexpensive hard or semi-hard wood—if for reasons of economy oak is not to be considered. All of the above-mentioned woods show beautiful effects under stain.

If it seems desirable to make the chambers of the house especially delicate and dainty the standing woodwork in them may be treated with ivory white paint, given what is known as an eggshell finish. This is a surface which shows a soft polish. The tone of the paint should never be blue white. Where the proposed decoration of the room requires

A Small House of Moderate Cost

IN THE DINING-ROOM THE WALLS MAY BE PANELED TO THE COVE OF THE CEILING-LINE

it the woodwork may be painted in a color which will complete the color scheme.

By referring to the plan it will be seen that the front bedroom opens directly from the small alcoved hall. This feature in the very successful house which has been built from these plans is most attractive. The three long, slightly bowed windows extend to within twenty-two inches of the floor. A shelf three feet in depth was placed in this window and under it the coils of the semidirect radiator. Here plants, ferns and stately palms were set, while suspended from the top of the window frame were three beautiful fern balls. The effect of sunlight filtering through the feathery green was delightful and added greatly to the distinction and beauty of the room.

The woodwork of the living-room includes a four-foot wainscot. Built in the eastern wall near the fireplace are the book shelves. These shelves are set flush with the wall and faced about with a plain six-inch trim, like the standing woodwork of the room. When filled with books carefully arranged with due regard for the colors of the bindings this becomes a very decorative feature.

About the fireplace six-inch unglazed tiles are used for facing and for hearth, in plain color, suitable to the decorative scheme of the room.

The mantelshelf should be absolutely plain, stained and finished like the standing woodwork. For this a heavy board should be used, supported by brackets of wrought iron, showing on the roughened surface of the iron the marks of the hammer.

If ash is used for the woodwork a very artistic effect is obtained by treating the wood with a silver-gray stain. There are stains now made which do not streak or show laps and are easy to apply. These have none of the objectionable features of many water or spirit stains, as they do not raise the grain of the wood in the least, thus effecting much saving of labor in obtaining a smooth surface. There is also a varnish which can be applied over the stain and which gives an effect that is soft and dull, without rubbing. This, of course, is much more economical than the old way of applying several coats of varnish and rubbing with oil and pumicestone. The finish which we refer to does not contain wax and dries well. It is also tough and durable.

In the dining-room adjoining the living-room the walls may be paneled to the cove of the ceiling line. An extremely attractive combination is made when bog-oak stain is used on the ash paneling of this room, which opens directly from the gray of the living-room. This stain is a dull dark green, very rich in tone, and makes an excellent setting for either oak or mahogany furniture.

The photographs shown are from a very beautiful room in a much more costly and elaborate residence than the one we are considering; however, the general form of the wood paneling outlining the plain plaster panels at intervals gives an effect which can be successfully introduced in the simpler house by eliminating the decorative line of plaster ornament (see illustration) of the ceiling and the carved swags of fruit on mantel and doors.

Built-in furniture properly designed finds its place readily in such a house. Buffets and china closets, window and inglenook seats go far toward making the rooms in which they are placed attractive and livable, and if planned for in the beginning do not add materially to the finished cost of the house.

Stains suitable for treating the interior woodwork may be purchased ready prepared for use, and should be applied with a brush directly to the bare surface of the wood. Where a lighter tone of the color is desired it is possible to use a stain reducer (liquid), which may be added to the mixed stain and will lighten the tone. The stain should always be tried out on a small block of the trim. In this way one can be sure of the result before applying to the actual standing woodwork of the room.

A Small House of Moderate Cost

After the stain is thoroughly dry the finishing varnish may be applied. The varnish which we would recommend provides a soft, dull surface resembling wax, but in reality is a varnish which dries hard in a few hours' time and is durable and easy to care for.

The floors of the house are the next point to be considered. Where the economic conditions permit oak should be the wood used for these, at least in the living-rooms. Thoroughly seasoned lumber should be carefully selected, the boards well laid, fitted and smoothed. A light brown stain is a good choice for color, as it supplies at once the tone which time produces later, and a more harmonious room is possible where there is no sharp crudeness in the floor color, as is often the case where new oak or Southern pine is used under the floor varnish.

There are several excellent floor finishes on the market, some of which produce the soft polish of the well-rubbed waxed floor, without the attendant slipperiness of wax, and, more important to the housewife, without the constant rubbing which the waxed floor requires.

The floors of the living and dining-rooms in the house shown in the plan should be of the same wood and treated in the same way. If of oak a filler should be used after the stain has been applied, and it should be remembered that the filler must be treated with the same stain before applying. When the floor has thoroughly dried two or more coats of the floor finish should be given it, allowing at least twelve hours' time between coats for drying.

For the standing woodwork of the two small bedrooms ivory white paint may be used. Two or three undercoats of white lead are necessary, to be followed by the final coats of ivory paint. This last coat may be flatted with turpentine to secure the eggshell surface which is desirable.

In the bath room hard plaster marked off in six-inch squares like tiles and finished with a high-gloss wood enamel forms an excellent wainscot. These may be six or seven feet in height and finished by a wood mold treated with the same enamel. The wall above may show a painted surface or be covered with a highly glossed paper of appropriate design. The surface of this paper is impervious to moisture.

In the service department of the house the standing woodwork may be left in the natural color and finished with a good tough varnish which will withstand heat and moisture.

Next month we will discuss wall treatment for the various rooms of this little house, together with hardware and lighting fixtures.

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO Year Book of Decorative Art, 1909, forms a complete record of the best work in decorative art being produced throughout the world and contains some hundreds of illustrations (several in color) of interior decoration, furniture, fireplaces, mural painting, wall papers, stained glass, wood carving, metal work, plaster work, stonework, stenciling, pottery and porcelain, glassware, tapestry, embroidery and needlework, etc.

BUILT-IN FURNITURE, BUFFETS AND CHINA CLOSETS, WHEN PROPERLY DESIGNED, MAKE THE ROOMS ATTRACTIVE

THE SCRIP

ELISABETH LUTHER CARY

THE COLLECTION OF MR. JOHN
G. JOHNSON
THE EARLY ITALIAN PICTURES
BY WILLIAM RANKIN

ABOUT a hundred pictures illustrate the Early Renaissance among Mr. Johnson's Italians. This group merges almost imperceptibly into the equally important body of High and Late Renaissance examples, which are not discussed in the present notice. Even within my limits there is matter of inexhaustible interest to the student, but I must confine my attention mainly to typical works of the more central and well-known schools. A rough orientation of the general historical representation may be given, for there are broad traditional characters which do not depend upon an exact adjudication of authorships. In the case of numerous beautiful and significant things we are only concerned with the attributions, as yet often under advisement, in so far as they help interpretation.

It is, of course, impossible in a brief notice to more than hint at the wealth of the collection in its less monumental but very rare, intimate and sometimes charmingly personal pictures, such as have been painted for private use, perhaps for friends, and have passed through the hands of the more exclusive collectors. Nor can any idea of the real value of the collection be gained if we neglect the numerous works, as predella pieces, in which, even in religious themes, the Italian artist has been inspired by the life around him to fresh and spontaneous invention. This aspect of many of Mr. Johnson's pictures is worth careful attention, for we are apt to think of the Italians as formal stylists who never unbend, whereas here we often feel a sympathetic relation to modern modes of painting and as we pass to the northern European schools, so richly represented in the gallery, we have little sense of an essential opposition of ideals.

As concerns the general distribution of examples within our group we have nearly two score of Florentine and Umbro-Florentine paintings and about the same number of north Italian works, including the Venetians. Nine or ten Siennese examples, and about the same number from Umbria, the Marches and the Roman School fill up

Collection of John G. Johnson, Esq.

CRUCIFIXION

BY FRANCESCO VANNUCCIO

LXXIX

The Johnson Collection

Collection of John G. Johnson, Esq.

MADONNA

ATTRIBUTED TO A FOLLOWER OF PIERO DELLA FRANCESCA

the hundred. We may consider the Siennese masters first, as representing the most conservative type and as including several of the few distinctly medievalist Italian painters.

A typical Siennese Crucifixion, a small devotional panel, is attributed by Berenson to Francesco Vannucchio, a rare artist of the second half of the trecento, who signs a similar work at Berlin. This panel, which we reproduce, gives a sort of cross section into the Siennese nerve and sinew, in a state of rather volatile passion. We have a prototype for Crivelli's, Giulio Grandi's, Guido's or Lo Spagna's passionate imploring, so superbly shown in the collection. The student should compare this vivid work with an impressive Crucifixion of more reticent style in the Bryan Collection (No. 189), belonging to Duccio's school, and with another fine work, of Simone's following, in the possession of Mr. Louis Ehrich.

More strictly traditional, severe and important is a predella piece by Bartolo di Fredi of seven single figures, Christ between Mary and John and Four Saints, an exceptionally strong example of quite monumental character, comporting with the personality of the artist as a dignified magistrate of the Republic. This painter has been unduly neglected, owing, perhaps, to the damaged condition of his highly original series of decorations in the Parish Church of San Gimignano, the only important extant monument of his style on a large scale. In this same region, but a little later, are two small Madonnas labeled Taddeo Bartoli and a small panel of Two Saints, long-proportioned figures, either Siennese or Umbrian, in a minor phase of the early quattrocento.

An ordinary Madonna by Sano and an excellent and delightful specimen of the inventive, intuitive and often highly imaginative art of Giovanni di Paolo introduce us to the Fifteenth century. No true Siennese painter cares for the mere science of the Renaissance, but the highly gifted Matteo, while entirely native and loyal to ancestral tradition, is, like Giovanni di Paolo, inspired by Florentine ideas.

His Madonna here, a radiant example, complements the superb St. Jerome in the Fogg Museum, and is one of the masterpieces of the gallery. Matteo's genial pupil, Cozzarelli, is also present with a similar theme, comparable to the Madonna in the remarkable collection of Mr. D. F. Platt and a fine predella piece in the possession of Mr. Walter H. Crittenden. An interesting manuscript illumination, not necessarily Siennese but of the medieval tradition, may be mentioned in this connection. Attributed to Francesco di Giorgio is the exquisite Profile Portrait of a Blonde Lady, possibly Isotta da Rimini, once given to Piero della Francesca or to Uccello. The present more satisfactory attribution may be tested by a comparison with a Portrait of a Lady in the Cook Collection at

The Johnson Collection

Richmond, acknowledged to be by the famous Siennese architect and painter. Siennese portraits are exceedingly rare and in no phase of art does the school attain a higher perfection. The subtlety and distinction of line and pattern, the refinement of the enamel-like tempera execution, no stronger than a delicate flower, bring this work into the rarest class of early Italian portraits, characterized by a direct classical simplicity of aim and a chastity of means which compare with Hellenic coins or the medals of Pisanello.

Before coming to examples of Renaissance origins or of a transitional style in Florence we may note briefly two trecento pictures: a Gaddesque Annunciation of some charm but of minor importance and the fine late Fourteenth-century panel, The Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine, now given on Siren's worthy authority to Angelo Gaddi, which has a touch of realistic feeling, and a sense of the particular model, such as we observe in John of Milan. Called Giottesque, and disposed with the classic and monumental feeling of the earlier Giotteschi, although betraying in its stylized draperies a survival of Lorenzo Monaco's time, is a charming Madonna Enthroned with Saints and Angels, helping us to see the transition to the Renaissance attitude, implicit here, to be a gradual modification in the more conservative men. With a little more of force and science this delicate piece would approach the work of the young Pesellino.

For a definite illustration of the budding life of the new age we may turn to a decorative picture of north Italian origin, perhaps of Pisanello's following, but more modern and simple than Pisanello when painting—with an affinity, let me say, to Starnina or Masolino. A dark lady with blonde hair worships an idol enshrined in a rustico temple. There is a flowered foreground and a landscape vista. The lovely tempera color, deep wine-red, lilac and deep greens, seems Veronese, and is not of Masolino's or the Florentine type. We shall see a somewhat similar harmony in the Madonna given to Squarcione. I emphasize this lovely picture for its objective outlook and descriptive character; the figures are in their field in a fresh and almost Masacciesque way. Transitional pieces of this quality are rare, instructive and altogether delightful.

The influence of Masaccio's initiative has an almost incalculable value for subsequent Florentine and Umbro-Florentine developments, and yet is exerted on strictly classic lines in a logical expansion of the ideals of the still more monumental Giotto. Renaissance realities, as distinct from the different forms of realism worked out by narrower

Collection of John G. Johnson, Esq.

MADONNA ENTHRONED
AND TWO SAINTS

BY DOMENICO GHIRLANDAIO OR MAINARDI

LXXXI

The Johnson Collection

Collection of John G. Johnson, Esq.

NATIVITY

WITH TRANSITIONAL FLORENTINE FEATURES

men, are what the student of art must take as his standard and point of departure, and it will be interesting for us to observe first the more radical and technically advanced types among Mr. Johnson's illustrations. In Masaccio's immediate following everything has great historical interest, and The Madonna in the Clouds, with saints and angels, ascribed by F. J. Mather—quoting Fry—to the school of Pesellino, who was a Masaccio follower in his early years, belongs to this rare category. It is by a secondary artist, but the solid construction, firm drawing, flexible action, rich color and a definite and masculine stylization on a naturalistic basis exhibit well the newer ideals of form, as against the survival of medievalist idioms, such as even Lippi retains. We recall here Domenico Veneziano and the unknown painter of the triptych of the Madonna and Saints in the Carrand Collection, a Crucifixion at La Quiete near Florence and a Saint Anthony of Padua in the Berlin Gallery (No. 1141).

Another picture, of a later time indeed, illustrates, I think, Masaccio's influence indirectly through Domenico Veneziano and the great Piero della Francesca, who works out in landscape to an almost modern stage, as no one else quite does, the objective principles implicit in Giotto and established in essentials by Masaccio. The work, which we reproduce, presents an upright Madonna with a background of cypresses and pines and a landscape, and has been attributed to Lippi and recently to Botticini, an artist of a less robust type than our unknown painter. We have here, indubitably it seems to me, the notes of Piero della Francesca's style in an immediate follower—as the columnar form, the breadth and sweep of the handling and, especially, a certain tonal reality in the whole field, with local light and air.

Through D. Veneziano and the neglected but substantial Baldovinetti the Masacciesque tradition is handed down to Verrocchio, concerning whose activity as a painter—or a pictorial impresario—there is less agreement than on the limits of his atelier and influence. Three Saints, a life-size group of competent, sturdy and dignified character, represents his immediate school, and is of considerable historical importance. The color may help connect the work with other strong Verrocchiesque pictures, like the altarpiece in the Uffizi. Francesco Botticini, probably at one time in Verrocchio's studio, may be seen here in a characteristic early work, a Madonna similar to one in the Holden Collection at Cleveland, and there are two less important but still charming pictures, Nativities, which are in the milieu of Botticini or are ascribed to him.

The Johnson Collection

Domenico Ghirlandaio, as one of Baldovinetti's pupils, is in the "advanced" tradition of Florentine painting and has been often accepted as a sort of type of the Early Renaissance. Mr. Johnson's important altarpiece, The Madonna Enthroned and Two Saints, of which we give a reproduction, exhibits the style well in its easy grace, cheerful naturalism and definite, competent design, although the execution of the work, and perhaps even the composition, probably belong to Mainardi, Domenico's most faithful follower. A series of predella scenes, given to Davide Ghirlandaio, are of independent and racy character, like the work of Berenson's Alunno di Domenico. The Pieta, in a landscape of great charm, ascribed by Berenson to Granacci, gives us a brilliant example of craft, and shows us what a thorough teacher Domenico was. The state of preservation of this picture is remarkable. A large and interesting Madonna, given to Domenico, seems of later and looser style than his. It is a puzzling work, more like Bugiardini or Ridolfo Ghirlandaio.

More fascinating to us than the "scientific" and "progressive" or realistic schools of Florence, precisely because they keep in memory the generalized and idealized modes of vision which our modern minds forget or ignore in the research of the literal and the familiar aspects of life and nature, are the half medievalist masters, from Fra Angelico and Lippi on. This more conservative side of the art in Florence is richly illustrated in Mr. Johnson's group. We must first note a very exceptional example of transitional style and not of direct Florentine origin, although it seems to have Florentine features. A Nativity, with an aristocratic Virgin and St. Joseph, is introduced into an elaborate landscape. A shepherd boy pipes to an angel while his dog barks at the apparition. The background is of transitional character with architectural features which might be identified in north Italy—perhaps, in the Milanese region. The color is suffused, schematic and "feminine," like an early Gozzoli, and we have at once a free type of composition, similar to the French miniatures of the period, about 1450, and those romantic landscape formulas, derived from the Middle Ages, which go on through Lippi, Botticelli and Filippino to take on a strangely modern phase in Piero di Cosimo.

The contrast between such work and the landscape in the picture I have called an offshoot of Piero della Francesca is worth observing, for it illustrates a broad temperamental distinction in a continuous tradition. The authorship of this remarkable Nativity, of which we give a print, should puzzle the experts. Several Florentine pictures of this early time express a similar idyllic feeling, a sort of sacred genre. The lovely small Annunciation given to Michelino is entirely inspired by Fra Angelico, yet glosses the Frate's classic chastity with a delightful decorative embroidery. A fine large Nativity, also called Michelino, with angels floating dreamingly in the air, has a touch of the Frate and of Lippi, with a little more of mundane elaboration. It might be by Jacopo del Sellaio. The work attributed to Fra Angelico himself, an Entombment, with portrait types, has great charm, but it is hardly an important or typically representative example. Gozzoli's early Madonna, on the other hand, is a lyric picture which will delight all lovers of this artist—and who is not a lover? W. R.

(To be continued)

MR. AUGUSTUS KOOPMAN has been showing an exhibition of paintings, etc., at the Cottier Galleries.

Courtesy M. Knoedler & Co.

SHEPHERDESS

See next page

BY L. CHIALIVA

LXXXIII

In the Galleries

Courtesy M. Knoedler & Co.

PALAZZO CORNER

BY RICO

IN THE GALLERIES BY HAROLD BENTLEY

THE excitement of the John S. Sargent water-color show having died away at the Knoedler Galleries, 355 Fifth Avenue, one has a little more time to wander among the other pictures hanging in the rooms. Among these is an exceedingly beautiful example of the art of Martin Rico, which makes his recent death all the more deplorable. This is called Palazzo Corner, Grand Canal, and discloses the man's remarkable facility in depicting architecture, giving the gaiety of the structures of the lovely city of the Adriatic, the freshness of the atmosphere, the sparkle of the greens and the gay life of the waterways, for these last are filled with gondolas. It is all essentially Venetian, all artistic in environment, and one comprehends the dolce far niente of the life there. The sun shines on these old buildings, with their wonderful façades, their tiled roofs and decorated doorways and windows, and away up on the top of a great palace is a summer garden from which figures gaze down on the scene below. It has all the charm of Rico's earlier manner and spontaneity. The favorite, Chialiva, is here with some of his sheep, and a pretty maiden tending the flock, assisted by her faithful dog. Behind are some trees and the whole is filled with brilliancy.

LXXXIV

SCOTT & FOWLES show at their gallery, 295 Fifth Avenue, New York, several pictures by the modern Dutchmen, notably one of considerable importance by the doyen of that school, Josef Israels. It is a life-size figure of a man and is called Old Age. Here the distinguished Hollander has caught the spirit of his venerable sitter, a man leaning his head on one hand while with the other he grasps a staff. The subject is, of course, one of the Dutch peasants, and the artist has rendered him in broad touches, with great directness and charm, and there is an abundance of rich, unctuous color.

A Fantin-Latour, Venus and Cupid, is one of the poetic fantasies of the distinguished and lamented Frenchman, a nude figure floating in the clouds

Courtesy Scott & Fowles Galleries

OLD AGE

BY JOSEF ISRAELS

In the Galleries

with the little god flying near by. All the delicacy of flesh tints, the grace of movement, the refinement and masterly qualities of technique are apparent, while, of course, the composition has much decorativeness. A rarely charming example by Cazin is also displayed, wherein there is a sky of tender tones and the greens are treated with Cazin-like charm of handling. By Courbet there is a dark and powerful marine of mid-ocean, with lowering skies and angry wave forms, a storm descending with great violence. This is painted in heavy impasto, perhaps with a palette knife, but always with sure touch and conviction, and it is eminently char-

Courtesy Arthur Tooth & Sons

THE FERRY

BY CONSTANT TROYON

acteristic. Another work is a dainty little evening effect, by Cazin, of a house against the sky, while from the Graves sale is the remembered and important example by Jean François Millet, Sheep

Shearing, one of the famous hundred masterpieces of the Barye Monument Association show of 1892.

Courtesy Scott & Fowles Galleries

VENUS AND CUPID

BY FANTIN LATOUR

Two important and unusual examples by the Barbizon men may be seen at the galleries of Arthur Tooth & Sons, 420 Fifth Avenue, New York. They are by Charles Jacque and Constant Troyon. The first is Sheep in the Woods, and the distinguished animalier probably never surpassed the paintings of these beasts, a great flock being rendered with distinction and rare ability. A shepherd guards them, assisted by his black dog, and some of the animals wander down to a pond in the foreground. Behind are some sturdy oaks, with gnarled branches, in which the drawing is careful and characteristic of the growth, while the whole tone of the picture is harmonious. The Troyon is no less important in its composition, color and admirable painting of the animals. The new building of Arthur Tooth & Sons, on the corner of Forty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, will be completed by May 1 and it is expected to be one of the most completely fitted establishments for the display of art in this country.

LXXXV

In the Galleries

Courtesy William Macbeth
A RUGGED FARM

BY J. FRANCIS MURPHY

At any rate, every modern convenience has been installed and the experience of years will have gone into its construction.

AMONG the group of American painters whose canvases are seen at the galleries of William Macbeth, 450 Fifth Avenue, New York, none, perhaps, has more of an appeal to the public than J. Francis Murphy, the landscapist. We reproduce here his A Rugged Farm, one of his recent performances, showing a hillside with bare trees against a pearly gray sky, and touches of autumnal yellows here and there. It is such a picture as the man loves to depict and was executed near his place in the Catskills, where he remains for a good part of the year. These trees are silhouetted against the sky, and the painter has generalized his nature, getting an elemental quality of strength and so being impressive. Another man whose pictures have been seen to advantage this season in these rooms is Charles W. Hawthorne, and a little lad in white, a sort of scullion, as well as one of his larger efforts disclose ability of a high order and a sympathetic rendering of the figure. The exhibition of the work of Arthur B. Davies, a very comprehensive one, by the way, attracted a large attendance, and while no little discussion ensued, the man has a large and enthusiastic following. A collection of pottery from the Volkmar kilns contains many exquisite tints, with lovely surfaces, with charm of form and of great decorativeness.

Courtesy Arthur Tooth & Sons
SHEEP IN WOODS

BY CH. JACQUE

In the Galleries

Courtesy Frederick Keppel & Co.

PIERROT CONTENT

ENGRAVED AFTER WATTEAU, BY E. JEAURAT

Freudeberg, to whom we owe the inception of the incomparable monument du costume, was born in Berne, Switzerland? These true artists, while observing and recording with a loving hand every outward beauty of a highly civilized society, have not been swept away on the tide of fashionable license—as were too many of their contemporaries whose shameless prints are the hidden prize of the collector.

AT THE Keppel Galleries, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, New York, an exhibition of engravings remains on view until May 4. Among the many artists of the Eighteenth century in France there are representative examples by Watteau, Lancret, Pater, Chardin, Boucher, Van Loo and Fragonard.

The leading motif of this exhibition is that of Watteau and of his pupils Lancret and Pater. Strange, is it not, that of all the painters who have portrayed "les fêtes galantes," two—and of those the greatest, Watteau and Pater—should have been Flemish and not French; that Lavreince, whose "interiors" are the most beautiful, should have been a Swede; while

AN IMPORTANT work by José Weiss, pupil of Harpignies, is shown by R. C. and N. M. Vose, Boston. It is called Spring Flood and depicts a rainy day, the great cloud masses in motion, their edges gleaming with light from the overcast sun, and the stream swollen over its banks.

Courtesy R. C. and N. M. Vose

SPRING FLOODS

BY JOSÉ WEISS

LXXXVII

Book Reviews

Copyright, 1905, by Photographische Gesellschaft
DUTCH ORPHAN GIRLS

Courtesy Berlin Photographic Company
BY N. VAN DER WAAY

REPRODUCTIONS of the best work of such Dutch artists as Israels, Jacob and William Maris, von Marcke, Mesdag, Blommers, Roelofs, Progenbeck, Artz, Bischof, Gabriel, Mauve, Neuhuijs have been shown at the galleries of the Berlin Photographic Company, 14 East Twenty-third Street, New York, in an interesting exhibition arranged by Mr. R. Lesch.

THE twelfth annual exhibition of the Ten American Painters has been on view at the Montross Galleries, 372 Fifth Avenue, New York. This interesting exhibition will be described in a later issue.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE COLLECTOR AND THE HOUSEHOLDER

THE "Collector's Manual," by N. Hudson Moore, just issued by Frederick A. Stokes Company, is a comprehensive guide for the assistance of collectors in gathering examples of such furniture as tables and sideboards, chairs and sofas, chests and cupboards, old-fashioned bedsteads and timepieces, desk secretaries and bureaus and such other objects as English pottery and porcelain, antique glassware, brass and copper utensils, lusterware and old pewter. The book is illustrated with 336 illustrations, with quaint page borders by Amy Richards. A good complement to this serviceable treatise, which is packed with curious and useful information, is Helen Churchill

Candee's "Decorative Styles and Periods in the Home" (Stokes). This book addresses itself frankly to those who have a taste above the slipshod makeshift of the cheap factory, but little or no special knowledge of decorative styles. To the householder of intelligent curiosity and modest purse these pages will bring a welcome familiarity with the historic meaning and the practical beauties of the product of the periods of the three Louis's, the Empire and the successive English development from Tudor to Sheraton, not omitting a short estimate of the tendencies, French, English and American, of "L'Art Nouveau," one of the American expressions of which is, "instinct with the nervous sensitiveness that is a national trait."

From Collectors' Manual, Frederick Stokes & Co.

WROUGHT-IRON CHEST

THE BEAVER HAT

THE PROPERTY OF L. A. FARRISON & CO.

BY PHILIP WILSON STEER

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOL. XXVIII, No. 148

COPYRIGHT, 1921, BY THE INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

AMERICAN COUNTRY HOUSES BY ALBRO AND LINDBERGH, ARCHITECTS

Two tendencies have contributed to the country house: its present importance as a problem in American architecture is due to the outdoor life and to inconsistent, rather than varied, beauty—two factors which, though of equal value have not won by equal recognition. Fresh air and the country life are proclaimed and acknowledged. We confess to having a large. But that we may be endowed also with the seeing eye passes belief. Modesty forbids the slight a presumptuous boast. Here and there individuals may admit a little here won taste, as a people we envy the men of the stone Age their refinement. The lecturer has told us with a glow of the golden days of the Republic when the painter was a heaven-born artist, of Athens when the merest truck farmer could deliver a fine oration for the Parthenon on demand, and we have from disinterested testimony that we have a thought above the cunning of foreigners. The vitality of the mind received common place is not due to any one who has occasion day or day to the abundant, humble, avid, practical matters of art pure and simple. There is the danger of a counter exaggeration. Those living at the millrace may think the wheel is swifter than it is, but it is not easily convinced that the flow is a delusion. So in this matter of country dwellings the architect may delude except the owner be gagged, and better that he be in vain, the lecturer may display his heraldic modes and protest that this people must be on the nation before the Great Architect of the Universe and fortune cannot say much will bring the matter to rest. But, unless we read the story and the song, there is nothing ingenious about ugliness and that a home is being people does not change the banker after new stories. There is the more re th

 a pr is to on to equi
 tion.
 timec
 ings.
 he see ough some i as a their i igh o every where set of know never
 Th amaz note with be s mill stre vine ter that labo exam abo nati fort wro
 and han

The INTERNATIONAL STUDIO

VOL. XXXVII. No. 148

Copyright, 1909, by John Lane Company

JUNE, 1909

A AMERICAN COUNTRY HOUSES BY ALBRO AND LINDBERG, ARCHITECTS

Two tendencies have contributed to give the country house its present importance as a problem in American architecture—the impetus to the outdoor life and the insistent aspiration toward beauty—two factors which though of equal value have not won an equal recognition. Fresh air and the countryside are proclaimed and acknowledged. We confess to having lungs. But that we may be endowed also with the seeing eye passes belief. Modesty holds the thought a presumptuous boast. Here and there some individuals may admit a little hard-won taste—as a people we envy the men of the Stone Age their refinement. The lecturer has told us with a sigh of the golden days of the Renaissance, when every tinker was a heaven-born artist; of Attica, too, where the merest truck farmer could draw up a full set of plans for the Parthenon on demand; and we know from disinterested testimony that we have never a thought above the canning of tomatoes.

The vitality of the misconceived commonplace is amazing to any one who has occasion day by day to note the abounding, humble, avid preoccupation with matters of art pure and simple. There is, to be sure, danger of a counter exaggeration. The miller living at the millrace may think the whole stream swifter than it is, but he is not easily convinced that the flow is a delusion. So in this matter of country dwellings the architects may declare that except the owner be gagged and bound they labor in vain; the lecturer may display his horrible examples and protest that this people must be an abomination before the Great Architect of their national fortune; but every mail will bring the comforting assurance that, unless we read the signs all wrong, there is nothing indigenous about ugliness and that a home-loving people does not altogether hanker after monstrosities. There is the more tangible evidence, too, of an economic result. The market pays its well-meant if sometimes bewildered respect to the esthetic appetite. Dwellings which seem to call for blind occupants suffer in value, so that all begin to pretend to good looks. The elevation, and not the plans alone, becomes an important item in an investment, and if a man is building for himself he intends to be housed with the same tact with which he is clad. He will not be decked out like a harlequin—not if he knows it.

Where the architect enjoys a real opportunity and shows himself worthy it is tact that we may look for confidently in his work. He will plan not only for the persons who are to live within the house but also to please nature outside. In this attempt we shall find him little concerned with self-conscious thoughts of that national style which throws the magazine writer into a fever of agitated demands. The architect knows that all houses have their parents and their grandparents. His privilege is, in tending the individual needs of his product, to choose its ancestors, suiting the heritage to its purpose. So we find in good work the mark of styles which have long since proved their beauty and fitness—traces of the Swiss chalet in the mountains; the manner of Italy where climate and the love of the garden prompts it; variations of a tropical type in the bungalow; vestiges of old Spain on land once ruled from Madrid, and often along the Appalachian slope those several styles that flourished before the colonies had thoroughly tested their career as a separate nation. There is, for example, a reminiscence of the home of Washington at Mount Vernon in the house shown on a following page, which Messrs. Albro and Lindeberg are building for Mr. Tracy Dows on the Hudson; and in the other minor buildings on this estate are several modifications of Colonial practice. But the work of these architects is especially interesting in the care they have put upon smaller projects.

They have turned to the older country work of England, and more particularly to the cottages of

XCI

American Country Houses

HOUSE FOR F. G. SCHMIDT, ESQ., KINGSTON, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG, ARCHITECTS

Kent and Sussex, for suggestion. Here they find a repose and charm that is generally lacking in our domestic work of small scale. Neither fantastic in outline nor frivolous in detail the English country cottage combines a simple dignity with a peculiarly successful feeling of home. The study of this type has led the architects to transplant some of its effects to the Westchester and Long Island region with gratifying results. The characteristic softening of outline due to the thatch roof has been reproduced in a roof which, while by no means the whole story, is worth noting. For the roof is unquestionably one of the important features in country-house designing. Bold in outline, simple in plan and picturesque in grouping and arrangement, successful roofs, as exemplified in English work, owe their charm to their unbroken surface and treatment.

The mechanical difficulties here have been met quite simply by the use of ordinary cedar shingles nailed wet (in which condition they bend easily) to furring so constructed as to give the roof a slightly convex surface and to admit the rounding of the gables; and by laying all the courses out of the horizontal so that they vary in exposure to the weather from one to five inches.

STABLE FOR CHARLES BROWN, ESQ.
MOUNT KISCO, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG
ARCHITECTS

COTTAGE OF EDWARD T. COCKCROFT, ESQ.
EAST HAMPTON, LONG ISLAND
ALBRO AND LINDEBERG, ARCHITECTS

RESIDENCE OF CARLETON MACY, ESQ.
WOODMERE, LONG ISLAND
ALBRO AND LINDBERG, ARCHITECTS

RESIDENCE OF CARLETON MACY, ESQ.
WOODMERE, LONG ISLAND
ALBRO AND LINDBERG, ARCHITECTS

RESIDENCE OF CHARLES S. BROWN, ESQ.
MOUNT KISCO, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG
ARCHITECTS

SMALL FARM COTTAGE FOR TRACY DOWS, ESQ.
RHINEBECK, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG
ARCHITECTS

RESIDENCE OF TRACY DOWS, ESQ.
"FOXHOLLOW FARM," RHINEBECK, N. Y.
ALBRO AND LINDEBERG, ARCHITECTS

FARM COTTAGE OF TRACY DOWS, ESQ.
 "FOXHOLLOW FARM," RHINEBECK, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG
 ARCHITECTS

STABLE FOR TRACY DOWS, ESQ.
 "FOXHOLLOW FARM," RHINEBECK, N. Y.

ALBRO AND LINDBERG
 ARCHITECTS

Philip Wilson Steer

PHILIP WILSON STEER, PRESIDENT OF THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

"THE painter is not worthy of praise who only does one thing well, as the nude, or a head . . . or landscapes . . . for there is no one so dull of understanding that after devoting himself to one subject only and continually practising at this, he will fail to do it well." The great Florentine's pet assertion, let pass, for us has a certain drastic effect. Off the roll of praiseworthy painters it sweeps many accepted names, while for those who come up to its universal standard it is a conspicuous certificate. Pol-Limburg, I suppose, and the Van Eycks; Giorgione, Correggio and Rubens; Rembrandt and Velasquez most conspicuously of the older masters stand this test. Of recent masters the most prominently to come up to it are Millet, Corot, J. and M. Maris, Manet and Wilson Steer, President of the New English Art Club.

Wilson Steer, as yet but in the artist's prime, fills in contemporary art a unique place. As landscapist, he has reached a height since Turner attained by few, and as painter of the nude with Watts, his position is solitary in British art. In portraiture, his range is more restricted, but here too, from his most congenial opportunities he has won a distinguished and penetrative expression. That a man barely at the full tide of an artist's strength should have reached a place so high, not merely parochially but, as posterity will count, in relation to modern art, is significant. We can discern, I think, in his earliest youth a partial cause. His father, himself a painter, tinged his youngest impressions with art and the study of a fine tradition. Hence the pictorial aspect and point of view grew up with him as the natural vision, the handling of pigment was soon habitual. As a lad of fifteen he could carry through a self portrait, in the style of Rembrandt, that still strikes one by its qualities of well seen form and tone, of honest assured handling and clear luminosity.

It is amusing to remember that in the Gloucester School of Art Steer stippled sedulously for the Academy. With unerring instinct they refused

"THE LIME-KILN"

XXXVII. No. 148.—JUNE, 1909.

BY P. WILSON STEER

259

Philip Wilson Steer

him, thereby tolling, as he supposed, the knell of his artistic possibilities. In Paris, however, the poor accomplishment of many disillusioned ex-Academy students injected a suspicion as to the fallibility of that frost-bound corporation. In the earliest eighties he took his schooling at Julian's and the Beaux-Arts, where we may figure him, I think, an inconspicuous student, impressed by Bouguereau, emulous of the academic style of Cabanel. Among his preconceptions, as it were a shell blowing them to pieces, dropped the Manet Memorial Exhibition of 1883. Before then, curiously, in the ateliers Manet had practically been undiscussed. The more surprising therefore Steer found his vision, the more readily he set out to follow it. With the masters of painting it seems usual that before breaking away into their personal, unique expression they should have passed through and probably excelled in the accepted academic canons of their upbringing. The nature of the Impressionism that Steer immediately contracted, for him precluded, if we do not count his student work, a period of tightness. For his Academy pictures of '83 and '84 I cannot speak, but certainly his first considerable period, represented by Knucklebones, Andante, The Pier Head, and towards its close by Boulogne Sands and The Procession of Yachts, covering from '85 to '93, was one of advanced loose principles. Generally those paintings appear, to our acclimatised eyes, undistinguished save by their inherent sense of light and colour, and a brilliant impressionism. Their motif is the penetrating influence of light, the glare of the full sun. From their painting, you would not anticipate one of the first living masters of actual pigment, nor from their superficial brilliance of suggestion, tone, and light, one of the greatest landscape painters of our day. Swanage of '91, a twilit seascape, is a remarkable exception. Its grave tenderness and poetry, its large massing and conception, are far more than clever.

Influence of one painter on another is by many writers misapprehended. An influence is more easily caught, it may be from an isolated picture, than is often postulated. Quitting what I might call his French phase, Steer distinctly made for a

"THE OUTSKIRTS OF A TOWN"

BY P. WILSON STEER

"CORFE CASTLE"
BY P. WILSON STEER

Philip Wilson Steer

different occupation. The pictures of 1896, and yet more of 1898, are hard to reconcile with Boulogne Sands. Their difference of handling, of which The Japanese Gown of 1894 (see THE STUDIO, vol. iv., p. 70), and The Waterfall of 1895 are a clear type; their exhibition of a formal pattern and especially the sobriety of their colour mark the deflection of his inspiration. Franz Hals, perhaps, and Gainsborough, and probably the work of his contemporaries, served to deflect it. In such a case, and in his later work, influence is more properly suggestion for an individual development. From Constable and Monet, from Boucher, Vermeer and Turner, Steer has accepted prompting, and in the detail of a pose and an arrangement from Orchardson. Peppercorn and Watteau have tinged his view of landscape, Whistler, I think, just transiently flushed it. Typical of the years I have named is the fine portrait of Mr. Croal Thompson, with its skilled tone and fluent brushwork; and the early Richmond Castle, obviously designed and of a full fat quality of paint. Of his sombre, almost monochromatic phase, with strong black shadows and silvery lights, a small nude of '96 and his woodland pieces, The Vista of 1898, a Park scene of 1899, and the grandly disordered Birdsnesting, are representative. In them we read Steer's deliberate pursuit of stately decoration and simplification; in them there is a rare appreciation of the varying properties of oil paint, its transparence and liquid impasto. By the very frankness of their decorative stamp, they achieve their function more successfully than do certain later pictures of this class. In these a quality of atmosphere and fusion, and the discarding of strong darks, weaken the rhythmical effect. Indeed, at one period of our master's development, dreading the smell of conventional arrangement he sometimes indulged realism at the cost of rhythm. That this was deliberate his preliminary sketches, instinct with firm-knit pattern, prove. His best and most characteristic work, seen in his latest oils and in his unexampled water colours, achieves that hardly compassed summit, the union of rhythmic swing with fusion and full content. To close my brief précis of the development of Steer's landscape prior to 1900 I will just touch, as distinct from his sombre tonality, the Watteau-like Ludlow of 1898, a peculiarly delicate and atmospheric composition, of an almost monochrome scheme of gold and grey, and Knaresborough of 1897, which is important as foreshadowing the particular revelation of landscape this artist has achieved.

But before I pass to that achievement, his series of paintings of the nude, mainly belonging to the 'nineties, must have place. As already said, Steer in this branch of art has a solitary rank in the British School. Watts only, and his aim was less concentrated, stands with him on the ground he occupies. In his rendering of the nude he has recaptured what seemed practically lost; he, in a country where Leightonism has obscured the real nature of figure painting, has revealed again the qualities in flesh and form that Tintoret and Correggio and Watteau so wonderfully felt. His work in this branch may be classed as thinly painted, when subtly beautiful colour was the theme, and as richly loaded when the shimmer of light suffusing gives flesh a new beauty and texture. The nude, in short, brings out in Steer his greatest powers equally with landscape. It gives full play to his love of silvery-greys, pearl-rose, and ivory-carnation, to his enthusiasm for the mystery of light and texture, the secrets of luminous shadow. Thus he endows his paintings with the single-minded purpose and large style of the great Italian and French masters.

A Nude and the Sketch for a Decoration recently shown with it at the Goupil Gallery, are typical of the painter's instinctive sense of colour. He seems almost unconsciously to think in colour; his colour rhythm, poet-wise, is simply born. The finest schemes that have occupied the greatest colourists, Japanese and European, have given him his harmonies: grey lilacs, "gold and honey," muted blues and silver; or, again, bleu de ciel gradating to a veiled opalescence, the gleaming white of cumulus, and in the foreground, opposed to the grey-blue iridescent distance, a richly golden green. This innate spontaneity of colour gives away, as one might hear it put, his neighbours in an exhibition; whereas his work strikes as colour, they too often seem but coloured. I need but to refer to his Uffizi portrait, the Mrs. Styan and Mrs. D. S. MacColl, to The Music Room (see THE STUDIO, vol. xxxviii., p. 227), The Beaver Hat, and At the Window for confirmation. And in this connection, and as his vindication as a penetrative portraitist, Mrs. C. K. Butler, with its beautiful flesh painting and Gainsborough-like quality of sweet dignity and refinement, finds place.

Another aspect of Wilson Steer's universality in endeavour is seen in his room decorations, his panels and overmantels. To them he brings a light and graceful inspiration, dixhuitième in mode, and in theme of what I might call the fête champêtre of to-day. The convention inseparable from space decoration he tempers with his individual sense of atmosphere and key. Sometimes in delicate colour, tuned to the surroundings, sometimes in grey monochrome he treats of picnic sports; girls playing battledore, or idling on the shore (an admirable excuse for his favourite scheme of pale honey and grey); girls angling, kite flying or engaged with the see-saw. Most beautiful of these decorative panels is the sketch design, lately exhibited, suggesting as it does the pitch Steer might fly, with the nude as subject, and as embodying his finest colour. Those who have seen the black-and-white painted Rape of the Sabines in the painter's studio will recall the distinction of its conventional style. It is especially interesting as revealing, in the raw, his main motif, the large fusion of nature in the shadows and the large pattern traced by the lights.

"A PROFILE"
BY P. WILSON STEER

Philip Wilson Steer

As the landscapes of the early 1900's stand to those of the 'nineties, so to them stands his present period. In this it is possible to see, I think, what his most personal expression will be. The earlier 1900's will be termed, perhaps, his transition period, the time in which so many masters have achieved such splendid work. The full power of sunlight again obsessed him: in contrast with the sombreness of 1898 and '99, his palette glowed with pigment's fullest gamut. Naturalistic effects succeeded deliberate decorative tonality. Dewy Morn, shown in 1900, is important since it contains practically a new expression. A little Park Scene of that time, inspired perhaps by some newly seen Watteau, gives us in a wholly fresh spirit the depth, the pathos, of that master, and foreshadows the profounder feeling in Steer's work. In 1901 and 1904 were painted The Rainbow (see THE STUDIO, vol. xxiv., p. 266) and The Storm, pictures of extraordinary brilliance. The latter indeed is consummate as rendering in perfect harmony the glare of sunlight beneath a sky almost black. Painters will appreciate the mastery of gradation to achieve this. To that period belong certain smaller canvases, more precious than the larger worked-up pieces. Spontaneous first impressions immediately registering their author's genius, enthusiasm, and swift selection; in quality of paint fluently swept in, with a rare sense of smouldering colour; bound together by a master of design, they are of Steer's most vital achievement. Such pre-eminently is the Hawes Sketch in Mr. H. Trench's important collection; such are, in Mr. Butler's possession, Haymaking and The Cotswolds. Their scheme is of silvery greys, clear steely blues, and in the lights a pale gold-green. The Hawes Sketch is ominous of storm and falling night, the large Hawes picture gives us the morning's joy; it is a great song of sunlight, of blowing wind and the glorious pageant of the sky, through which sail mighty cumulus, shadowing in strips the great expanse of moor and fell. A more visionary note is struck in the limitless distances, lost in the mystery of light, of The Golden Valley, the Severn Valley and in certain water-colours of 1901 and 1903. In his water-colours more, perhaps, than in his oils Wilson Steer may be said to have found a new expression, to have revealed. In them rings a chord of intensity and passion less audible in the oils, of which indeed stock criticism asserts the detachment, the lack of deep inspiration.

This year's indisputably is Steer's highest pitch, as yet. The Blue Sash, At The Window, and the landscapes of the present exhibition abundantly

"CLIFFS BY THE TEME (EVENING)"

BY P. WILSON STEER

"THE BALCONY"
BY P. WILSON STEER

Architectural Gardening.—V.

display it. Constable, with whom only the robust splendours of Rye Harbour and Corfe Castle (p. 261) are comparable, did not achieve their full conviction. His knowledge of skies and his power of structure were less. For their quality of a beautiful inspired realism the distances in Rye Harbour and The Lime-kiln (p. 259) are in art unequalled. The grip of land structure, the strength, massiveness and limitless recession of Corfe Castle; the sense of elemental might and of the puniness of man; in fine, the epic vastness of land and sky that epitomises a great perpetual mood of nature, place this with the grandest work in landscape painting. With some of the most beautiful stands The Isle of Purbeck. Of all Steer's work it is the most complete. In quality of simple spontaneity of pigment, in its technical economy and co-relation, above all, by its spiritual depth, it justifies so high an estimation. The Isle of Purbeck may afford us the clue to the master's future expression. A companion picture, Scene in a Park, has the same profound under-current of thought. They both voice a stillness and a deep regret.

Such, briefly, has been Steer's path from a brilliant unlovely impressionism to a beautiful poetry; from a raw science to one of the peaks of profound art. The remoteness from material quality in Turner's most perfect attainment he has just touched. The Isle of Purbeck, purged, is truly spiritual. With the quality of his pigment, which, masterly and richly handled with a great painter's understanding though it be, yet appears lacking in finesse, time will deal, refining and enhancing. On this Wilson Steer, of course, relies. The ultimate condition, under varnish of his enamellesque dry-paint, with its varied dragging and luscious impasto, will, I think, turn out to be not only finer than we suspect, but more, a distinct contribution to the art.

Need I add that Steer is unrepresented in our National Gallery of British Art?

C. H. COLLINS BAKER.

A RCHITECTURAL GARDENING —V. WITH ILLUSTRATIONS AFTER DESIGNS BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A., AND F. L. GRIGGS.

THE additional interest and charm which water will give to a scheme of house and garden when carefully planned was suggested in the last of these notes, in the March number of THE STUDIO, and the curious neglect hitherto of the obvious advantages in design which the subject of a riverside house affords in this respect, was also mentioned.

A BOAT-HOUSE AND BUNGALOW. DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

Architectural Gardening.—V.

There can surely be few more delightful problems that an architect can be called upon to solve within the range of domestic architecture, than that of designing upon a given site and under given conditions, a summer-house and garden on the banks of any one of our English rivers.

The neglect to take advantage of all the possibilities water affords in garden design, is by no means confined to work on the riverside; it is usually entirely ignored where there is a natural running stream of water actually on or adjacent to a site. It may sometimes occur that an old brook with a high hawthorn hedge forms one of the natural fences, and a more beautiful and effective one for the purpose could not be contrived; particularly if it should so happen that it forms the boundary between the approach road and the entrance side of the house. Here is an opportunity for a pleasant little stone or brick bridge, roughly built, with its sides decorated with a selection from the infinite variety of water-side flowers, which all our rivers (and notably the Thames) provide in abundance, covered with a deep arch formed in the old hedge itself or continued from it as may be necessary, the whole set centrally with the entrance door and connected to it by a white stone-flagged path bordered with flowers. Some such an idea as this can be easily and simply effected, and yet the usual method of dealing with such things has been to straightway fill up the brook with concrete, to tear up the old hedge by the roots and build a staring red brick wall topped with a cast-iron catalogue-railing with cast-iron gate and posts in the centre to match, and at a total cost for which the old fence could have been adapted a dozen times over.

Actual instances in proof of this are by no means wanting, and the sad thing about it all is that such vandalism has not been committed through any desire to destroy the natural beauties of a site for any particular practical purpose or from a mere lust for destroying beautiful things, but rather from a sort of ingrained conviction that no Englishman's house is complete until it is surrounded by a brick wall or a cast-iron railing. This sort of thing is to be seen in almost any building operations where new houses are concerned, and especially in the outskirts of our cities and towns. The old natural fence is usually the first thing to be destroyed, whereas for both common-sense and economical reasons it should be one of the first things protected and retained. Unhappily, however, it is a very rare exception to see common-sense exercised in such a simple matter as this; so rare indeed is it that the exceptions almost count for nothing.

A RIVERSIDE COTTAGE AND GARDEN
DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

In work of this kind there appears always an unreasoning and aimless spirit, evidenced everywhere, in the misuse of material, in the entire want of a definite plan, both in house and garden, in the unintelligent application of so-called "ornament," and clearest of all—it is the sure mark of the speculating builder—in the cheerful indifference to the surroundings of his work and their connection with the building. If he could only be persuaded to save his money by leaving the natural boundaries alone, something would be gained, and a vast amount of unnecessary ugliness avoided. He has indeed been known to see dimly the point as it concerns his own pocket; but he is always obsessed with the idea that such a treatment lacks "finish," and is not suitable for a "gentleman's house."

Architectural Gardening.—V.

It is curious how often such a natural advantage to a site as that afforded by a brook or almost any form of running water is regarded as a blemish; whereas the owner of such a site should deem himself a happy man in the possession of it. There are so many and varied ways in which it can be turned to good account. It is not often, perhaps, that it will so happily dispose itself as to form one of the boundaries of the site; it has been known to run directly across the middle of it, perhaps not only of the site, but of the house itself. In the latter case a skilful architect once turned such a "blemish" into the most attractive part of the design of the house interior. In any case a very little common-sense and ingenuity are required to overcome such difficulties as these, and convert them into valuable and permanent artistic assets.

Questions of this kind often occur in flat countries, where small streams and brooks are often found and where any additional variation on a site is especially welcome. In such cases the water can be so brought into the design of the garden and led about in small streams and still smaller channels as to form at once a useful and decorative feature. For example, a small lily pond can be contrived as the central point of the flower garden, and the overflow from that carried to serve a practical purpose in the kitchen garden, and from thence taken back again into the stream; but on its way it can be made to afford a continual pleasure, not only to small children enthusiastic on things piscatorial and aquatic, but also to older

A RIVERSIDE HOUSE

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

A RIVERSIDE HOUSE AND WATER GARDEN
DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A.

Architectural Gardening.—V.

ones who never at heart, whatever they may pretend to the contrary, lose their natural interest in such things. The miniature river can have small craft and the pond or pool small fish in proportion to it; in the latter case it is surely a more reasonable and sensible method of keeping them than in glass cases in stuffy rooms.

An endeavour has been made to illustrate some of these suggestions for water treatment in the accompanying illustrations.

The double cottage or bungalow and boat-house on page 266 illustrates a design made for a site removed from the main river but connected with it by a backwater. The building itself is proposed to be set back from the stream some 30 or 40 feet, the junction with it being by the narrow canal shown in the drawing, just wide enough to allow two boats to pass, and no more. On either side of this small waterway flagged paths are proposed, bordered with wide flower-beds.

In the design of houses to be placed on the river-side, or near to it, the question of the flood level is an important one. That it is usually ignored or forgotten a journey on the Great Western Railway from London to Reading, or Oxford, in winter time will easily prove. It is no uncommon sight to see some of these riverside houses and bungalows with the gardens submerged on the occasion of an ordinary winter flood, and the ground-floor standing two or three feet deep (and sometimes more) in water.

Of course the somewhat important primary question of the selection of the site comes in here, but assuming a wise choice has been made it is not difficult to fix the normal flood-mark and take precautions accordingly.

In the design here illustrated the flood-mark was assumed at a certain height and the level of the ground-floor fixed some feet above it. As the sketch shows, it is approached from the ordinary water-level on either side by a wide flight of stone steps, the number of which was determined, of course, by the two levels; in this case they are comparatively few, but it might be necessary under some circumstances considerably to increase them.

The space thus obtained, under the cottage, is utilised in the centre for the boat-house, with useful storage places on either side of it.

In this plan accommodation is given for two separate cottages (or bungalows proper), having one boat-house in common. A variation of the same idea and within the same external lines gives a common living room in the centre of the cottage

GARDEN WALL AND RIVER GATE

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

Architectural Gardening.—V.

COVERED BRIDGE, BOAT-HOUSE AND SUMMER-HOUSE
DESIGNED BY C. E. MALLOWS, F.R.I.B.A., AND F. L. GRIGGS. DRAWN BY F. I. GRIGGS

with bedrooms planned on each side, the kitchen, &c., being placed in a central projection at the back.

The drawing on page 267 shows an idea for another double cottage, planned entirely for week-end or holiday boating purposes. Here, again, the level of the ground floor is placed above the flood level and approached by a raised central path from the stream. This path terminates at the water's edge by a semicircular flight of steps, the number of which is determined, as in the other design, by the difference between the normal level of the stream and the known flood level. By this arrangement of a central raised path the surrounding ground need not be touched, as a pleasant effect of a sunk garden on both sides of the entrance way is naturally obtained. The cottage itself would be built on arches, and a portion of the space under each end made to serve the purpose of a boat-house and boat stores as might be found necessary. The only effect aimed at, so far as the external appearance goes, would be that obtained by the reasonable use of local materials to give a certain definite expression in colour, form and texture.

In the design on page 268 the same conditions as in the smaller cottages are assumed as to the two different levels to be considered; but in this instance the whole of the terrace between the two projecting wings has been raised above a somewhat low flood level in a Midland county. On some sites it would be necessary to raise the centre portion between the opening in the river wall and the wide open porch between the two bay windows; steps would then lead down on one side to a sunk garden and the boat-house, and on the other side to a similar garden and outdoor tea-house shown on the left-hand side of this perspective view. The level of the tea-house floor and that of the covered shelter on the other side would then be the same as that to the central path.

A larger house, and of a more definite architectural character, in the manner of the latter part of the seventeenth century, with the same architectural quality carried into the garden design, into the boundary and division walls and the garden-house, is shown on page 269. This house has also been designed for the riverside, and the scheme for the gardens controlled by it. The lily pond shown in the drawing is in the centre of the south front, and a similar wall with piers in the centre forms also the western side of the pond garden. Beyond this garden on that side a boat-house and swimming pool occur, both of which are directly connected with the river. The materials used in all this work would be the local hand-made bricks and tiles, and English oak for the main cornices, window frames, and the columns and entablature

Architectural Gardening.—V.

GARDEN BORDERING A STREAM

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

to the garden shelter, the structure itself being of brick and tile of the same kind as those used for the house.

The presence of a stream of navigable size nearly always means a greater or lesser degree of publicity, and for this reason the treatment of the plan of that part of the house and garden facing the river requires special care in order that whilst the maximum amount of the benefit of the river scenery should be obtained, it must be so contrived that the privacy of the house and garden is not destroyed. The illustration on page 270 shows at least one method of arriving at that end. Here the entrance to the garden is imagined to be on the banks of a public river, and the house supposed to be built with the maximum amount of privacy as one of the first conditions to be met, at the same time the utmost benefit of the stream being obtained. The window at one end of the principal living-room could have views both up and down stream, whilst the doorway connects the enclosed flower-garden directly with the water. On the opposite side of the garden, to the left of the doorway, would be the boat-house with a gate to the river direct. It would be approached at the other end from the enclosed garden.

A BROOK IN A GARDEN

DESIGNED AND DRAWN BY F. L. GRIGGS

Architectural Gardening.—V.

The covered bridge, summer-house, and boat-house on page 271 is designed to serve a number of different purposes in one building. Firstly as an approach to a house (on the opposite side of the river) for vehicular and foot traffic, and as part of a scheme for cloisters and pergolas, so that a sheltered promenade from the house on to the bridge can be obtained. In the centre of the bridge is a combined boat-house, summer-house, and dovecote, with an internal stairway from the summer-house to the boat-house and stores below. The lantern on the roof serves a purpose for illumination and one of ornament in the centre of the design.

The brook in a garden on page 272 shows a view of a simply treated garden with a quite small summer cottage. This house is to be built in the centre of a square plot of land and the garden quartered as suggested in the drawing.

This small scheme is proposed for a site on the coast of Norfolk, and the materials used are to be brick and flint in the characteristic style of the old cottages of that county.

In the little town of Chipping Campden, in Gloucestershire, are many "backs" suggesting a treatment such as that drawn in the view of a garden bordering a stream which appears opposite. The grouping of the bridges, wall and hedges in such a case would well repay the small cost, and the land across the stream might be used for the development of a larger garden. There are many villages with a stream running through the main street, and some such treatment might be applied quite inexpensively. In several cases the bridges still exist, and it is much to be regretted that they are so often closed in.

This garden bordering a stream was suggested by a site in the Cotswolds, the building being of brick and stone (both the materials near at hand). The endeavour would be to build in such a manner that, whilst the house would have a character of its own, its local parentage should be clearly apparent. This is an absolute necessity if it is to take its place amidst its surroundings in the same

"SAN GIORGIO—MATIN"

(See next article)

BY JEANÈS

The Water-Colours of M. Jeanès

natural way as the old work does and which is really its greatest charm.

This remark tempts one to the digression on a question of architectural ethics as concerning subjects of this nature. The custom that obtains now of building not merely in the local manner, but of a slavish and thoughtless imitation of the form and details of old work, the use of weathered stone, of tiles, the colouring of new work in foolish imitation of the old, cannot be too strongly condemned. It is in reality a senseless and purposeless form of forgery, and entirely at variance with the spirit in which the old work was done. The old men built their houses just as they wanted them and in their own natural way, with the materials nearest to them and best adapted for the purpose. The result of the present system, followed by many who really ought to know better, is that some of the Cotswold villages are forfeiting their former charm for something which is unpleasantly suggestive of the stage scenery at Drury Lane.

Sir E. Burne-Jones's Wheel of Fortune has been acquired for the Victorian National Gallery at Melbourne under the Felton bequest.

THE WATER-COLOURS OF M. JEANÈS.

THE difficulty experienced by artists in getting themselves known in such a place as Paris has often been the subject of comment. I am nevertheless of opinion that this is entirely a misapprehension, and that in spite of the formidable and ever-increasing number of painters, real individual talent is never long in coming to the fore. The case of Mons. Jeanès amply supports my contention.

Only a very few years ago the name of this artist was unknown to all save a very few friends. By birth a native of Lorraine, Jeanès had been much appreciated by certain artists at Nancy, such as, for instance, Victor Prouvé, but he left Lorraine for some years and led a wandering life, making long sojourns in the Dolomites, a very wild district and one in which our Parisian painters, little liking to brave the discomforts of the country, never set up their easels. Later he redescended towards Italy, crossing passes and traversing regions but little known, and lived at Venice and in the little towns of Tessin and Venetia, during those seasons

"ROCHETTA DI ZOLDO"

BY JEANÈS

63

UNARMED (1907)
FROM THE MARINE CORPS

Colours of M. nana

1871-1872

The following are the

PLATE

The following are the colours of M. nana
as observed in the wild state. The colours of the young are very different from those of the adults. The young are very much like the adults, but the colours
are much fainter. The young are very much like the adults, but the colours
are much fainter.

The following are the colours of M. nana
as observed in the wild state. The colours of the
young are very different from those of the adults. The young are very much like the adults, but the colours
are much fainter. The young are very much like the adults, but the colours
are much fainter.

"MARMAROLE, DOLOMITES."
FROM THE WATER-COLOUR BY JEANÈS.

The Water-Colours of M. Jeanès

of the year when the inclemency of the weather rendered life in the mountains impossible.

Jeanès is, in fact, an artist of his own creation, self-taught, having never come under the influence of any other painter, having never sought lessons from anyone, save from Nature herself. He has never let us into the secret of his successive struggles, and has but shown us the fruits of his matured talent. Herein, without doubt, lies the reason for this artist's very rapid success. Four or five years ago he showed at the galleries of M. Majorelle, in the rue de Provence, a number of his works which, by their force, their vigour, and their striking colouring, contrasted strangely with all the artificialities and platitudes of the brush, lacking all individuality, which Parisian galleries show us every day.

Thenceforward one began to realise that the French school possessed a great landscape painter, and the success of Jeanès was assured. The most exclusive galleries, like those of the late Camille Groult, opened their doors to his forcible landscapes. Collectors snapped up his water-colours as fast as they appeared either at the Société Internationale or at the different water-colour exhibitions, and even at the public auctions they fetched comparatively high prices, a thing hitherto unprecedented. The exhibition of his works, paintings, water-colours, drawings, and sketches which opens chez Dewambez at the same time as these lines appear, could not have a better aim than the display of such personal and distinguished talent.

Here is an artist profoundly original, and original first of all in the choice of his subjects. Many artists, certainly, have painted mountains, but I know of none who has painted them as Jeanès does. There is nothing so grand and so wild as the deserted and unexplored regions of the Dolomite Alps or the mountains of Southern Tyrol. The weird shapes of the lofty crags which lift themselves bristling to the sky, the precipitous peaks upon which even the snow cannot obtain a hold, stretching up to dizzy heights in columns and fairy palaces such as no human architect has ever been able to imagine—all are depicted with striking allure in the work of our artist.

Jeanès, better than anyone else, is familiar, through long study, with the geological formation and the shapes of the rocks, and with extreme

"POMAGOGNON ET SORAPISS (DOLOMITES)"

BY JEANÈS

The Water-Colours of M. Jeanès

precision and an inimitable neatness of drawing he depicts, enveloped in a radiant fantasy of colour, the architecture of the giants of the Alps. It is worth while to note also, that while the greater number of artists paint mountains from the bottom, Jeanès looks at them from their summit. Hence the majesty of the majority of his water-colours; hence, too, those infinite horizons in which he shows us the billowy crests in their glorious chaos, pearl-grey in the dawn or purpling in the dying day.

M. Louis Vauxcelles, a close friend of Jeanès, and who accompanied him in the Dolomites and watched him at work, has described in well-chosen words the painter's technique, to him so familiar, and I cannot do better than quote them here.

"Jeanès," he writes, "has evolved his own technique, deeming the possession of such to be the basis of all artistic expression. It is necessary that the painter shall be sure of his method and shall not bungle or leave anything to chance. Let us have a horror of insincere virtuosity, but let us be conscientious and quite certain of the means at our disposal, so that we may be master over them.

The technique of Jeanès is the outcome of profound knowledge deliberately and boldly applied, and remains a secret with him.

"Let us then," he continues, "say a few words about these water-colours. Their finish, their sparkle, their solidity, their sonorous splendour, are obtained simply by the superposition of unmixed tones. Jeanès uses pure colours and only colours in powder—in this way he obtains his beautiful pulverulent effects—he never uses dye colours. Such water-colours are permanent, and their material survival is assured. There is no water-colour, using the term as meaning a wash of colour or gouache, and no white. The white is always got by leaving the paper exposed. The most usual colours on his palette are beautiful smalts, malachites, adorable lapis-lazulis, and natural earths—no lakes and no cadmiums."

So far, it is as painter of the Dolomites, par excellence, that Jeanès has become known both in France and in England; for since the recent exhibition of mountain pictures at the Alpine Club's Galleries in London he is not unknown in the latter country. At the same time, it would be

"GROSSE VAGUE ROULÉE (PAS DE CALAIS)"

BY JEANÈS

"LA CHAIR DE VENISE"
BY JEANÈS

Western Influence upon Art in Japan

"ÔHAGO"

BY CHÔUN YAMAZAKI

unjust not to remember many other works inspired by diverse motifs. This exhibition, which, as I have mentioned above, is being held at the gallery of M. Dewambez, shows us not only Jeanès the painter of mountains, but another Jeanès whose work is no less delightful, a Jeanès painter of the sea, a Jeanès astoundingly adroit. He could not be the possessor of a vision so infinitely sensitive, such as we know him to have, and not be tempted to paint other scenes, or fail to respond to all the witcheries of nature.

Our readers will call to mind certain reproductions which we have already published of works by this artist (see THE STUDIO for last December, in which two of his Dolomite pictures exhibited at the last Salon d'Automne were reproduced), and in those that appear accompanying this article his wonderful power as a colourist is shown to still greater advantage, and makes one think of no less a person than the great Turner himself.

280

HENRI FRANTZ.

WESTERN INFLUENCE UPON ART IN JAPAN. BY CHARLES HOLME.

FOR some time past it has been evident that the influence of the West upon Japan is not to be confined to science or commerce or social habits, but that it is permeating all the varied manifestations of artistic activity. For the last twenty years, drawing with the hard point and painting in oil colours have been taught the young students in the Government Schools of Art in Tokio, and the progress that has been made in that time is astonishingly great.

Visitors to the last Great International Exhibition in Paris will remember the display of paintings in the Western manner in the Japanese section. The result was not by any means successful, judged by the standard of Europe and America; and the whole artistic world exclaimed against the folly of a great people setting aside its wonderful traditions and its masterly technique for such feeble imitations of Western conventions as were exhibited on that occasion.

"A SLEEPING GIRL"

BY KUNITARÔ TERAMATSU

Western Influence upon Art in Japan

"SHOWERY WEATHER"

BY HACHIRÔ NAKAGAWA

be accomplished without extraordinary difficulties. They say that painting, from their point of view, means the expression of that which has entered into the soul by the observation of the senses; that a painter should paint from what is within him, and not directly from extraneous sources; that Nature must have so filtered through his senses and become so incorporated with his inmost self that his eye requires no further recourse to external objects to enable

But one of the great characteristics of the Japanese nation is its untiring application and perseverance. Once it has set its mind upon a certain ideal, no difficulties or discouragements daunt its ardour. Each failure only seems to add fresh fuel to the fire of its endeavour, and, little by little, sure advance is made and the goal of its ambition is more nearly approached.

It is not surprising that certain elements of opposition to the changes make themselves felt in Japan. Native connoisseurs and lovers of its traditional arts view with not a little disfavour the leanings towards Western methods, and they cling with fervour to the ideas and the conventions of the old Kano and Tosa schools. Others, and these are among the more thoughtful critics, while greatly admiring the sculpture and paintings in the National Gallery, the Louvre and the other great collections abroad, seem to believe that the underlying conditions of character and tradition, which in the course of ages have called into being that which we know as Western Art, are so at variance with Eastern character and tradition that the grafting of the arts of the West upon those of the East cannot him to record his soul-pictures.

The Western method of painting direct from Nature, while admittedly of extreme interest, is believed by these Japanese critics to be totally at variance with the traditional conceptions of art as held by their countrymen. They therefore argue that the art of the West cannot be satisfactorily amalgamated with that of the East. But in their efforts to solve this problem, these gentlemen should not fall into the mistaken impression that because some men are unable to paint unless they see their subject actually before them, such procedure is the universal rule and absolutely necessary

"A FISHERMAN'S DAUGHTER"

BY YOSHIYE OKA

Western Influence upon Art in Japan

"A CLOUDY DAY"

BY ISOYE SAITÔ

to the Western painter. Instances to the contrary might be multiplied. Even the man who sits in front of Nature to portray it on canvas must allow the scene to pass through his brain before he can depict it, and if fifty different painters attempt to place the same subject direct from Nature upon their canvases, the results will vary in accordance with the receptivity of the brain to colour and form, as it must also vary from the state of the technical ability of each individual. Turner sat before Nature in his early years and endeavoured to portray what he saw, just as he also did in his later life. But in his early days his art perceptions were not developed. His views were clouded by conventions of technique; his innermost mind had not become attuned to the mysteries and glories of form and colour, as in later years. "I never see Nature like that," said an uncultivated critic to Turner when examining one of his later landscapes. "No, but don't you wish you could?" replied the master. Yet Turner was a copyist, as were also Sesshiu and Motonobu and Tanyu. They all painted Nature as they felt it or saw it in their inmost selves. It might or it might not have been stored there, and therefore did or did not receive its expression directly from its original source; but whether immediately or not, the result in each and all of these cases, and in the case of every other artist, is brought about by the same operation. But the difference between the great artist and the indifferent is one partly of workmanship, but mainly of brain or soul receptivity. Turner perceived in his later years what was not evident to him in the early part of his career. The grander and more mysterious characters of form and colour which one finds in his matured work were as much a copying of Nature as his laboured early efforts, nay, even a much more intimate reproduction.

But these sublimer sides of Nature are not observed by the lesser artist in the same degree as by the great master, and hence he does not depict them.

If the great Kano masters had been taught to paint in European fashion they would have been none the less great because of the difference of technique. The artistic sense is not entirely governed by technique, although it is influenced thereby. Because the Japanese

"GOING HOME"

BY KÔTARÔ TERASAWA

Western Influence upon Art in Japan

"THE GREENGROCER'S SHOP, AUTUMN"

BY HIROSHI YOSHIDA

student to-day copies figure in the life-class with charcoal or lead-pencil, or draws landscape direct from Nature in oil colours upon canvas, while his father, with brush and Indian ink, was invited to express in a few lines his memory of a bird's flight, the growth of a flowering plant, or the wild tossing of the sea waves, it does not result that his artistic nature shall be stifled. The future of art in Japan will depend on the development of the character of the people. Art is the expression of the life and the soul of a nation, and with a progressive race it must change and develop in proportion to the nature of that progression. There is much that is admirable, much that is inimitable, in the old art of Japan, and no one could see the passing away of that art without feelings of the profoundest regret; and it is greatly to be desired in the artistic welfare of the nation that, in grasping the methods of the West, it shall not entirely lose hold of those of its own which are so excellent—methods which have aided in rendering Japanese art a subject of admiration to all people for all time.

The Fine Arts Exhibition held a few months ago in Tokio under the auspices of the Department of Education, contained a remarkable display of sculpture and painting in the Occidental manner by Japanese artists. In order that readers of THE STUDIO may obtain some idea of the progress in Western methods made in Japan, a few illustrations are here reproduced from the excellent catalogue published in Tokio by the Department.

The little statuette Ohago, by Chôun Yamazaki, is a charming example of the sculptor's art. The graceful folds of the garment deserve the highest commendation, and it is to be hoped that work by this artist may ere long be seen in European exhibitions. The study of A Sleeping Girl, by Kunitarô Teramatsu, is a very pleasing rendering of a difficult subject; Showery Weather, by Hachirô Nakagawa, is a tender and characteristic little Japanese landscape; A Fisherman's Daughter, by Yoshiye Oka, has caught much of the bright and joyous manner of the maidens of Dai Nippon. In the Cloudy Day, by Isoye Saitô, the distance values are well maintained; a characteristic type of the native labourer is seen in Going Home, by Kôtarô Terasawa; Hiroshi Yoshida exhibits a typical street scene in The Greengrocer's Shop, and Seiji Katô happily

"FOREST IN SPRING"

BY SEIJI KATÔ

Western Influence upon Art in Japan

"CHRYSANTHEMUMS"

BY TORAJI ISHIKAWA

expresses sunlight and trees in Forest in Spring, Chrysanthemums, a still-life study by Toraji Ishikawa, both in its arrangements and its technique, shows how strongly the Western influence is dominant even in the treatment of those subjects in which the Japanese have in their own way been considered inimitable. In Meditation, by Wakun Ishibashi, there is nothing left of Japan—even the subject as well as the treatment being entirely Occidental. The drawing, however, is excellent, and would not shame a European master.

Critics may rail against the unwisdom of the Japanese in adopting the methods of Occidental art, and, yet, if in adopting them they are able to do full justice to them, and to express at the same time their own actual vital characteristics, who shall say them nay? These are no longer the days of Sesshiu, of Tanyu, nor even of Okio and Hokusai. The march of events progresses with astonishing rapidity in the Land of the Rising Sun. Western literature and Western science are surely altering the aspirations of the people, and Western art must of necessity follow suit. Other Asiatic nations are still true to their ancient traditions; but, being so, there is little or no advancement among them, and their art has become crystallized and without life. All the great arts in the history of the world show fertility of invention, and are not slavishly based on that which has gone before. Where fertility of thought is absent, where individuality ceases to assert itself in great works, there surely is decadence of race. Never before have the Japanese shown greater signs of advancement than they do now. These signs speak well for the future of the people, and the time will surely come, if it be not yet at hand, when her artists will rival on their own ground those of Europe and America.

But the value and beauty of that which is past in the great periods of Japanese Art will never be lessened or dimmed by whatsoever may be realized in the future.

Among the acquisitions recorded in the fifth annual report of the National Art Collections Fund are a set of 14 small etchings by Sir David Wilkie, presented by Sir J. C. Robinson, C.B., and now hung in Room V. at the Tate Gallery.

"MEDITATION"

BY WAKUN ISHIBASHI

The Royal Society of Painter-Etchers

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS.

IN reproducing on the following pages a selection from the works exhibited at the recent exhibition of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers, in Pall Mall, we have to congratulate the Society on a most successful display. We scarcely remember, indeed, a more interesting exhibition than this one—the 27th since the foundation of the Society. Not only was there a good representation of work by the Society's leading members whose reputation as etchers was made long ago, but among the plates contributed by the younger men who have joined the Society as associates during recent years we found not a few of more than average merit. The liberal patronage which the Society gives to rising talent is, in fact, convincing evidence that its executive is keenly alive to its responsibilities. And not only was the average quality of the work exhibited on this occasion good, but there was an abundance of variety both of subject and treatment, proving that individually the Fellows and Associates, while not unmindful of the traditions of the art they practise, are not fettered thereby.

Sir Charles Holroyd on this occasion contributed seven capital plates, The Gateway of the Palazzo and Belluno being especially fine examples of his refined execution. Mr. Brangwyn was as impressively original as he has ever been in those large compositions in which he masses effects of dark against extreme light and keeps in its place an infinity of realistic detail sketched with freedom and admirable fluency and vigour of line. Mr. East is Mr. Brangwyn's only rival in respect of size, but the landscape painter's effects are greyer and quieter. Practically all the other plates were on the customary small scale, the Whistlerian dictum touching the matter of dimensions being evidently approved by the bulk of those forming the Society. Sir J. C. Robinson's Corfe Village and Corfe Castle were both of them beautiful etchings; and Mr. Mortimer Menpes also showed to great advantage this year in his eight plates. A successful example of Mr. Fred Burridge's sensitive needle was to be seen in The Upland Farm, and particularly worthy of mention are two plates sent by Mr. Percy Robertson—Hampton Court and The Farm Pool, and Mr. Malcolm Osborne's Santa Maria della Salute, after Guardi. Of Col. Goff's eight subjects we reproduce one of The Grand Canal, Venice, which well represents his mature art. Mr. A. W. Bayes' Haughmond Abbey was another interesting achievement, albeit the line work appeared a little monotonous. Among other contributions by members which attracted our notice were a Study of Trees, by Mr. G. Gascoyne; Saint Paul—Saint Louis (Paris), by M. Eugène Béjot; The Broken Boat, by Mr. E. W. Charlton; A Flood, by Mr. P. Thomas; Rye, by Mr. Robert Spence; and The Stable Door, by Miss M. Bolingbroke.

Turning to the work by associates we note first of all an admirable rendering of Schloss Neuschwanstein, by Mr. Percival Gaskell, whose mezzotint St. Albans, which we include with our illustrations, is an excellent example of this process. We should have liked to see more examples of mezzotint—there were only two or three proofs representing this method of execution out of over three hundred—as we certainly think that among the members there are not a few who are capable of achieving good results by this process, which would amply repay the greater expenditure of energy and care which it demands. Mr. Sydney Lee's The City Walls, Segovia, and Mr. Sheppard Dale's The Belona of Tromsø were both noteworthy for their individuality of style. Other associates who contributed excellent plates to this exhibition were Mr. A. Bentley, Mr. Herman A. Webster, a talented American artist settled in Paris, Miss Mabel Robinson, Mr. Waterson, Mr. Lumsden, and Mr. John Wright.

The Society has suffered a serious loss by the death of its official printer, Mr. Frederick Goulding, which took place during the currency of the exhibition. We append on p. 292 a portrait of Mr. Goulding from a dry-point executed by Mr. W. Strang, A.R.A., and a brief notice of his career from the pen of an Associate of the Society.

Until failing health prevented him from working at his craft, Mr. Frederick Goulding was beyond all rivalry the greatest printer of etched plates in the world. Indeed, considering the improvements which have been gradually introduced into printing, it may be accepted as the fact that no one has ever been so successful in producing with ink and paper the best possible impressions from metal plates. He was himself a teacher of etching during one period of his career, and he produced about forty original etchings, one of which was reproduced some time ago in THE STUDIO in two states of printing, but anonymously at Mr. Goulding's own request. He did not wish to be known as an etcher, and although he exhibited half-a-dozen proofs at the first exhibition of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers, when outsiders' work was admitted, he afterwards refused offers from several publishers who proposed to publish his plates. Instead of electing him as an ordinary member the Society appointed him to be their Printer.

The Royal Society of Painter-Etchers

Mr. Goulding was the son and grandson of successive printers to the Mint, and his father continued printing banknotes up to the invention of machine printing. As a boy he was apprenticed to Messrs. Day & Son, of Gate Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields (his father, John Fry Goulding, being the manager), after being a student in the Science and Art Schools for two years. He remained at Day's as apprentice and journeyman until 1880, when he set up for himself at Kingston House. He was by that time well accustomed to print for artists at the workshop and at their own studios, and could recall his first interviews with Whistler in 1859 and Haden in 1862. He may be said to have proved plates for every well-known etcher since that time, as he impressed every one with his delicacy of hand and eye, and his vast experience of all the resources of his craft.

In 1875 he went to South Kensington as assistant to Prof. Legros, whom he succeeded two or three years later, being himself succeeded in 1891 by Mr. Frank Short. The students showed their appreciation of his long services by presenting him upon his retirement with a silver cigarette box and cigarette case, with a suitable inscription etched by one of them, and these were amongst his most cherished possessions. He also had a very valuable collection of proofs from many of the plates which, from time to time, had passed under his hand during nearly half a century. One of the last which he printed was his own portrait, a dry-point by Mr. William Strang, A.R.A., which was recently exhibited at the Academy. It is one of Mr. Strang's most successful later plates. He himself thinks so highly of Mr. Goulding's powers that he doubts whether an equally good impression can now ever be taken from the plate.

In a paper read before the Art Workers' Guild, of which he was a member, Mr. Goulding expressed his views on printing, explained the various technical difficulties, and described how on one occasion six different workmen, working with exactly the same materials, produced six different results. It was his opinion that simple printing is the most difficult. "When you do all the tricks," he once said, "you can cover up all the faults."

To print a delicate line as he printed it required a very delicate hand, long experience, and a master mind. It need only be added that all etchers were his friends, and he was endeared to them by many ties of sympathy and fellowship.

"THE CITY WALLS, SEGOVIA"

BY SYDNEY LEE

"OLD HAMMERSMITH"
BY FRANK BRANGWYN, A.R.A.

"GRAND CANAL, VENICE"
BY COL. R. GOFF

"SCHLOSS NEUSCHWANSTEIN"
BY PERCIVAL GASKELL

"ST. ALBANS" (MEZZOTINT)
BY PERCIVAL GASKELL

"A SUMMER NIGHT"
BY DAVID WATERSON

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE FREDERICK
GOULDING. FROM THE DRY-POINT
BY WILLIAM STRANG, A.R.A.

(By special permission of the artist)

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

RECENT DESIGNS IN DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE.

THE proposed house at Guildford in Surrey, of which we give illustrations, has been designed by Mr. Baillie Scott for a site which has a considerable fall from east to west. It is a house on a hillside sloping towards the west and commands a view of especial beauty. In the middle distance far below, the river now winds amidst level pastures. Beyond that rises the green hill on which the ruined chapel of St. Martha's stands, a relic of the age when buildings instead of forming a blot on the landscape seemed rather to interpret and make articulate its romance. In planning a house for such a position as this one naturally provides that each of the principal apartments should command the view, and a glance at the plan illustrated will show that this requirement has been fulfilled; while the balcony adjoining the drawing-room may be considered as the box for special contemplation of the scene.

But apart from the consideration of the view, the main factor to which the special form of the plan is due is the fall in the ground. On such a site, rooms which from the entrance side on the east are ground floor rooms become on the western side upper apartments. The hall occupies an intermediate level in the central part of the house, and below it on its lower side are the heating chamber and cellar only. Below the north side of the building are the dining-room and kitchen premises, and above the south end are a suite of bedrooms and dressing-room. On approaching the house from the road the expediency of the carriage drive has been happily replaced by a paved path bordered with perennial flowers divided into bays—separated by pillars built of chalk from a neighbouring quarry and backed by yew hedges. This separation and enclosure of a comparatively narrow portion of the frontage as the approach, allows of the remainder of the land on this side of the house being laid out in unmown grass with orchard trees. Adjoining the house the chalk pillars are placed closer to each other and so form a pergola—a kind of bridge between sunk gardens on either side. On entering the front door we find ourselves in a gallery adjoining and at the same level as the drawing-room. The view of the hall from this gallery is shown in the illustration on p. 293. The drawing-room itself has a semicircular plaster ceiling and a long window with seats and glazed china cup-boards at each side. From it opens the octagonal garden-room with open timbered roof and floor paved in a pattern of grey stone and brick. Returning to the gallery there are five steps from this down into the hall, which is a piece of structure in English oak and plaster, the oak being left in its natural tones of greyish brown. From the stairs at the east side of the hall one approaches the dining-room under the drawing-room, which has a western window and garden porch, and at the back of this are the kitchen premises. At the south end of the hall four steps down bring one to the study with its single fireplace and recess

PROPOSED HOUSE AT GUILDFORD, SURREY: THE HALL

M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

UPPER GROUND FLOOR PLAN OF PROPOSED HOUSE AT GUILDFORD
M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHITECT

for books; and on this lower level may be noted the octagonal bathroom with central circular bath. There are three bedrooms and a dressing-room over the south wing. The total accommodation of the house consists, therefore, besides the central hall, of three sitting-rooms, five bedrooms, dressing-room, bathroom, and kitchen premises; and the estimated cost is £1,500. In the building of such a house it may be noted, in conclusion, that the modern ideal of perfection, which consists

PROPOSED HOUSE AT GUILDFORD: GARDEN FRONT FACING WEST

M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

FIG. 1. FIRST FLOOR PLAN OF PROPOSED HOUSE AT CHALFORD.
M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHT.

Five steps from this porch is a piece of structure called the oak being left in its natural brown. From the stairs in the hall one approaches the drawing room, which has a garden porch and at the end the kitchen premises. At the hall four steps down bring one to its single fireplace and recess for books; and on this lower level may be seen the octagonal bathroom with central circular light. There are three bedrooms and a dressing room over the south wing. The total accommodation of the house consists, therefore, besides the central hall, of three sitting rooms, five bedrooms, a dressing room, bathroom, and kitchen premises. The estimated cost is £1,500. In the layout of such a house it may be noted, in connection with that the modern ideal of perfection, which can be

FIG. 2. AT CHALFORD. GARDEN FRONT FACING WEST

M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHT.

PROPOSED HOUSE AT GUILDFORD,
SURREY: APPROACH FROM ROAD.
M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT, ARCHITECT.

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

TWO VIEWS OF A DINING-ROOM IN A BERLIN FLAT

DESIGNED BY M. H. BAILLIE SCOTT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

in making every line absolutely straight, and every surface smooth, will be set aside for the older and better way which aims rather at the recognition and development of the character of each material used.

We also give two illustrations of a Berlin interior with furniture and decoration designed by Mr. Baillie Scott, one of many commissions carried out by him on the Continent. The furniture in this dining-room is for the most part in unpolished rose-wood, the purplish-brown tones of which stand out well against the gilded canvas of the walls. The existing woodwork of the room is finished black with neutral grey panels. The upholstery and carpet are in tones of red. Hence the general colour scheme is red, black, gold, and purple-brown. The electric light fittings are in gilded metal with scarlet flowers, and the central ball checkered in black and white.

PLAN OF ST. PETER'S VICARAGE, BUSHEY HEATH W. E. WATSON, ARCHITECT

Our next illustration is of a vicarage recently built at Bushey Heath, Herts, from the designs of Mr. W. E. Watson, A.R.I.B.A. The structure, which is in close proximity to the church, is of brick, roughcast to a natural gravel colour, with stone bays and dressings. The timber work is of cleft oak, and red sand-faced tiles are used for

SAINT PETER'S CHURCH
BUSHEY HEATH HERTS
PROPOSED VICARAGE

ST. PETER'S VICARAGE, BUSHEY HEATH

W. E. WATSON, A.R.I.B.A., ARCHITECT

Recent Designs in Domestic Architecture

the roof. The accommodation on the ground floor is shown by the plan given opposite; on the floor above there are five bedrooms and the usual offices, and in the roof there are two large rooms for use as day and night nurseries. The cost of the building was about £1,700.

The little house in North Wales called Wynns Parc was built some year or two ago, in an old orchard and garden, in the midst of the beautiful Vale of Clwyd.

It is treated externally in white roughcast and stone, with green slates, similar to the cottages and farmhouses in the neighbourhood. In plan it is simple, with an entrance-hall and dining-room, and one large parlour with loggia or garden-room opening off it into the garden. The ceilings are ornamented with modelled plaster, some copied from old examples near by, and the walls are mostly white with pale french-grey paint to the woodwork. The house is furnished, with excellent judgment and taste, with admirable pieces of old furniture, glass and china, which add greatly to its simple charm. It was erected from the designs of Mr. E. Guy Dawber, architect, of London.

PLAN OF WYNNS PARC, NORTH WALES

E. GUY DAWBER, ARCHITECT

WYNNS PARC, NORTH WALES: GARDEN VIEW (See also illustrations on next page)

E. GUY DAWBER, ARCHITECT

Alexander Mann

WYNNS PARC, NORTH WALES: THE PARLOUR E. GUY DAWBER, ARCHITECT
(See preceding article)

ALEXANDER MANN: AN APPRECIATION. BY NORMAN GARSTIN.

THE characteristics that an artist reveals by his work and those which are known to his intimate friends are sometimes strangely at variance. The man may seem to us hesitating and vacillating, but his painting or sculpture is determined and strong; the man may seem to us mean and worldly, yet his work will show him to have a deep vein of poetry and pathos. Everyone who has a wide acquaintance amongst artists must have frequently felt puzzled at these curious discrepancies: "Why does So-and-so, self-sufficient and rather blustering, paint these finical pictures?" etc.

The fact is we are all so complex that there is room in most men for the greatest apparent contradictions, and some of these qualities will only reveal themselves as reactions responding to some influence which alone can call it into evidence. Art is, as it were, the solvent that liberates the spiritual quality imprisoned in some petrifying characteristic, and thus gives it life.

Some men, on the other hand, make their art the expression of their obvious personality, they draw aside no veil, they express what those who know them would expect of them. Of these the late Mr. Alexander Mann was a very notable example—his character was strong, simple, and direct, and above all things sincere. He could not exaggerate, even for effect; to be true and to be sane and to set down what he saw without any parti pris, that was his aim and his effort always in painting, and struck the keynote of his art. He looked out into the world with eyes that saw very clearly things as they are; possessed of great technical ability, he set them down with consummate certainty and conviction. He painted with untiring industry—and with that pleasure without which no work is art—the phases of life with which he found himself most in sympathy.

But his outlook was singularly wide, his freedom from prejudice permitting him to take in a large range of subjects which his technical skill enabled him to realize. This versatility is apt to stand in the way of popular success, for the world likes to be able to label a man—"Oh, that is the fellow who paints cats or mountains, etc., who does those beautiful gardens, etc."; but for all that the artist who wanders in many fields keeps young and gets more joy out of his visions than does the specialist.

WYNNS PARC, NORTH WALES: GARDEN VIEW E. GUY DAWBER, ARCHITECT
(See preceding article)

Alexander Mann

If one desires to seek what Alexander Mann wrought with greatest success I think undoubtedly it was his panel sketches, his habit being to do several of these every day during that part of the year in which it is possible to work out-of-doors. In this way he gained a power and facility which place him among the best sketchers of his time. Only his friends know these, but the exhibition of his work which is being held at the Baillie Gallery this month will bring more general appreciation. In looking through the vast number of these panels that he has left, one sees, as in a cinematograph, the sliding pictures of his days. In his early married life he settled at Hagbourne, a beautiful Berkshire village, and although family reasons led him to Streatham as a residence, with a studio at Chelsea for work during the winter months, yet all his painting life was faithful to the broad downs and sheep-dotted hills round Hagbourne and Blewberry, in the churchyard of which latter, and by him much-loved, village he now rests. Then comes an important series of panels telling of an extended sojourn of nearly two years in Morocco, undertaken for the health of his family. Another long series is of Walberswick, where he passed several holidays with his family by the sea; a certain mountain by the Welsh sea fascinated him and was his model in many a subject, again the pictured record of summer holidays. So also are the Spanish girls making cigarettes in Seville; the lines of fishing boats with oblique lateen sails that reflect themselves in bright flashes in Sicilian harbours.

There is no room in a short article like this for the story of Mann's life; indeed it was fortunately

"SHEEP-SHEARING IN BERKSHIRE"

BY ALEXANDER MANN

Alexander Mann

"PORTO VENERE"

BY ALEXANDER MANN

felt a natural pride in his talented son, and he smoothed his path with a sufficient allowance.

In Paris, Mann responded to the various influences under which he came. Working at first in Julian's studio he later fell under the fascination of Munkacsy, whose tricky methods, however, soon palled upon him; then, drawn by Carolus-Duran's brilliant technique, he came somewhere about '81 to the old grimy school in the Boulevard Port Royal, where the master handed on the traditions of Velasquez to students gathered from half free from most of the vicissitudes and anxieties which, whilst they go to the making of interesting biography, are painful by their frequent occurrence in the lives of artists.

the nations of the earth. I think the impulse given by Carolus-Duran was perhaps, the strongest

Coming of a mercantile family in Glasgow, his father, a man of remarkable strength of character who had built up a large business, intended Alexander, his second son, to follow on the lines he had so well and wisely laid. Wealth and prosperity were the goal of these lines, and it is not wonderful that the father, knowing his son's clear head and high integrity, desired for him that he should help in the conduct of affairs. But in amongst the orderly and business-like tendencies of the son of such a father there had been slyly mingled by some not altogether malignant fairy a plentiful portion of the artistic temperament; and this ingredient was too masterful to be thwarted, so it came to pass that the warehouse, at which he dutifully worked for seven years, was exchanged, in 1877, for a student life in Paris.

But it is characteristic of his determined nature that all this time, after or before office hours alternately, he attended the School of Art in Glasgow. If his father felt any disappointment, he was too wise and broad-minded to show resentment, indeed he must have

"A BY-WAY IN ITALY"

BY ALEXANDER MANN

Alexander Mann

IV. ALEXANDER MANN

...anxieties
...of interesting
...and
...reference

...family in
...of remark-
...who had built
...Alexander,
...on the lines
...Wealth
...the goat of these
...wonderful that the
...clear head and
...red for him that he
...conduct of affairs.
...orderly and busi-
...of the son of such
...sly mingled
...malignant fury
...athletic temper-
...ment was too
...came
...at which
...years,
...a student

...of his deter-
...after
...thereafter, he
...in Glasgow.
...meeting,
...must have

...a rational principle
...talented son, and
...smoothed his path with
...sufficient allowance.

In Paris, Mann was drawn to the various influences under which he came to work, at first in the studio he later found in the fascination of Manet's work, whose strictly methodical
however, soon pulled him him, then, drawn by Carolus-Durans technique, he came to where about '81 to the grimy school in the Port vau Port Royal, where master handed on the traditions of Venetian students gathered from all the nations of the earth. I think the impression given by Carolus-Duran was perhaps, the strongest

"A BY WAY IN ITALY"

BY ALEXANDER MANN

"PHILOMÈNE." FROM THE OIL
PAINTING BY ALEXANDER MANN.

Studio-Talk

and most enduring of his artistic education, and though in the years to come he used his powers in various directions, yet he never lost the style which became his method of expression in these days. Later on he spent the summer in Venice, and some of the pictures he painted on this his only visit there are amongst his most complete works. N. G.

STUDIO-TALK.

(From Our Own Correspondents.)

LONDON.—The Water-colour, Pastel and Drawing Salon, held by Messrs. Marchant & Co., at the Goupil Gallery and which came to a close last month, was the most important of the early spring exhibitions. It was clear that the managers of this exhibition had taken pains to admit nothing that was not individual and consequently inspiring. Such a drawing as Mr. William Nicholson's The Hunter's Staircase, with its imaginative appreciation of a strange but real interior effect, was amongst the first things in the galleries, and Prof. C. J. Holmes' Pevensey—Noon was a water-colour of a remarkable quality. There were subtle interpretations of storm effects by Mr. Wilson Steer, and a most exquisite pastel of the nude, by Whistler, in the rooms. Some water-colours, obviously derived from Mr. Sargent's art, by Mr. von Glehn, were carried out with a brilliancy of achievement worthy of the master by whose methods they were inspired, and Mr. W. B. Ranken, in a similar order of picture, called In the Gardens of the Alcazar, Seville, had carried the problem of sunlight to a highly successful conclusion. Sir W. Eden's Velasquez Room, Prado, Madrid, was a feature, and so was Mr. Clifford Addams' Agostina and Child. There were two important water-colours by Mr. Alfred East, A.R.A. Mr. A. W. Rich was not, perhaps, at his best in his, in this case, too prettily coloured drawings, and the individual art of Mr. Lamorna Birch, with its decorative qualities of colour, suffered from too easily attained and superficial charms, but such a water-colour as The Hurrying River was of a most highly interesting order. Mr. A. Ludovici, Mr. Cayley Robinson, Mr. A. E. Vokes, Mr. E. Newell Marshall, Mr. J. Nickal, and Mr. David Neave were all represented by good work, and Sir Charles Holroyd's pictures contributed much to the distinction of the exhibition. Two caricatures by Mr. Max Beerbohm were included—one a singularly happy satire of Mr. Orpen executing in his own way a commission for a Portrait, in which the sitter is discovered at the further end of a room, full of objets d'art, only the back of his head visible above a lounge seat. Mr. Hughes-Stanton and Mr. H. Muhrman made valuable contributions; and a notable picture, Salutations, well represented the genius of Mr. George Henry, A.R.A. The black-and-white drawings included the brilliantly handled work of Mr. Cossaar, excellent drawings by Miss G. Halford, a very fine study of a man's head by C. Stabb, the bold and personal art of Mr. J. D. Fergusson, and work by Mr. Augustus John—baffling, but sometimes airing a beauty of craft which could easily be separated from the uncanny motif. There were painted silk fans by two or three ladies. Miss Thea Proctor's panel, The Masqueraders, was far above the work in which she attempts the things at which Conder succeeded. It is difficult to bring a notice of the exhibition to a close, so many achievements remain unmentioned. Certainly deserving of expanded comment, did space permit, were the pictures of artists (whose work was, however, on their usual lines) such as Messrs. A. S. Hartrick, Bertram Priestman, Joseph Pennell, Roger Fry, A. L. Baldry, J. Aumonier, and others.

STUDY OF FRUIT

BY GEORGE CLAUSEN, R.A.

"RICKS—EVENING"

BY GEORGE CLAUSEN, R.A.

During the present month, the most important of the year in art matters so far as London is concerned, picture lovers and picture buyers have plenty to occupy their attention in town. The two big shows of the Royal Academy and New Gallery, to which we shall refer more fully next month, of course claim the chief share, but within a short distance of these exhibitions there are some "one-man" shows which should on no account be missed. There is, for instance, Mr. Wilson Steer's exhibition at the Goupil Gallery in Regent Street, which will continue open till the end of the month, and then a little further east, at the Leicester Galleries, we shall have from the 20th of the month onwards an important collection of paintings by the distinguished Academician, Mr. George Clausen, representing work done by him during the past three or four years. In connection with this event Mr. Clausen has kindly permitted us to reproduce a small number of the pictures which will be on view. The President of the New English Art Club (whose annual show, by the way, is to open next month at the Galleries of the British Artists in Suffolk Street) excels in landscape and the nude. Mr. Clausen too is one of our foremost painters of landscape and figure. No contemporary English painter has striven more arduously than he to contain bright light within the opacity of paint, and scarcely another could be named who has solved in so masterly a way the difficult problems of light which the painting of interiors presents. His art, ever young, has never yet stood still, but advanced always from the embarrassment of one problem to another.

Messrs. Manzi, Joyant and Co., of 25 Bedford Street, have lately held a most complete exhibition of original etchings and dry-points by Sir Charles Holroyd, and are still holding a remarkably interesting exhibition of eighteenth-century Japanese colour prints. Sir Charles Holroyd's methods are as constantly varied as the nature of the subjects he takes up. Uniformity, except in mastery, was not to be found in the exhibition, but there is a style in which he seems to reach his highest, that from which we get such rare and striking results as in the plates The Piazzetta, The Ghetto or Oak Tree Lock.

At the Carfax Gallery the recent exhibition of the late J. R. Spencer Stanhope's work came as a revelation to a younger generation. The artist, we

"AN ITALIAN CHILD"

BY GEORGE CLAUSEN, R.A.

"A THRESHER." BY GEORGE CLAUSEN, R.A.

Studio-Talk

are reminded in the catalogue, was born in 1829. He went up to Oxford from Rugby at the time that Rossetti was directing the ceiling decoration of the Oxford Union Debating Hall; he assisted in this work and became an artist self-taught. Later he exhibited in the newly-opened Grosvenor Gallery. In 1880 he retired to Florence, and lived there until he died, last August. He was among the first to revive the use of tempera. In the works exhibited, so powerful and rare a sense of beauty inspires each composition that quite faulty and sometimes feeble drawing fails to make itself unpleasantly felt. The painter's genius was curiously similar to that of Burne-Jones, yet at all times his own.

Mr. George Belcher, who has been exhibiting at the Leicester Galleries, has a vivacious pencil. He owes a great deal to Phil May, is attracted by the same aspects of life, has not quite the individual distinction of craft of his master, but much of his realism. He is, what after all is rare, a humorist—one who has not to search for the humours of this life, but finds them impossible to escape. The Rivers and Streams, by Mr. Sutton Palmer, at the same gallery, were in treatment as quiet as the aspects of nature which they represented sympathetically.

In considering the works of the Barbizon and Modern Dutch painters, the names of three collectors who have recently passed away instinctively come to mind—Mr. Staats Forbes, Mr. Alexander Young, and Sir John Day. The works of two of these collectors have already been dispersed, and those of the third—of the late Sir John Day—are to be sold at Christie's during the present month. The Staats Forbes and Alexander Young pictures have been fully discussed in these pages (vols. 36, 39 and 40), while several examples from the Day Collection appeared in the special number of THE STUDIO devoted to the works of the brothers Maris. If not so extensive as the other two collections mentioned, that of Sir John Day contains many notable pictures. Corot is represented by several works of the highest quality, while the examples by Millet, Rousseau, Diaz, Troyon, Dupré, Jacque, and Harpignies are nearly all of exceptional interest. The impressive Solitude by the last-mentioned artist represents the zenith of his art, and gained for him the médaille d'honneur at the Paris Salon of 1897. It is, however, in the works of the Modern Dutch school, particularly of the three brothers Maris, that the chief claim to distinction of the Day collection lies. Two of the most beautiful works Matthew Maris

"VILLE D'AVRAY"

BY J. B. C. COROT
(In the late Sir John Day's Collection)

Studio-Talk

"NEAR DORDRECHT"

(In the late Sir John Day's Collection)

BY JAMES MARIS

has yet produced—the noble Four Mills and the exquisite Feeding the Chickens—are amongst the most notable things in the collection; while the Amsterdam, Dordrecht, Ploughing and Stormy Day are the pick of a remarkable series of masterpieces by James Maris. In no other English collection is William Maris, the youngest of the three famous brothers, so well represented, and the other leaders of the school, Israel and Mauve, are also seen to advantage. A few years before his death the late

"THE LITTLE BRIDGE"

(In the late Sir John Day's Collection,

BY C. F. DAUBIGNY

Studio-Talk

judge removed to a house near Newbury, in Berkshire, especially well arranged for the display of pictures. In a spacious dining room, lighted from the top, the gems of his collection could be seen to the best advantage, and he was always willing to allow anyone seriously interested in art to examine the works.

Appropriately with the Spring came the fourth Annual Exhibition of flower paintings at the Baillie Gallery. Amongst the most successful were Mr. W. Paddock's Cherry Blossom; Roses and Phlox, by Fred Mayer; Zinnias, by H. D'Arcy Hart; Narcissus and Carnations, by J. D. Fergusson; Campanula and Pansies, by Laura Knight; A Formal Garden, by Albert Cox; Chrysanthemums and Michaelmas Daisies, by Arthur Rackham, R.W.S.; Darwin Tulips, by Margaret Waterfield; Sunlight on a Rose, by Katherine Cameron; Tulips, by A. E. Guyon; Herbaceous Border in my Garden, and Cypripediums: a study, by Francis E. James; Flowers, by M. E. Atkins, and Roses, by W. Westley Manning; White Roses, by Stuart Park; Dahlias, by Gerard Chowne; Sweet Sultan, by A. F. W. Hayward; and lithographs of flowers by T. R. Way.

Mr. Arthur Streeton's Venice pictures seemed to bring sunlight into the shaded premises of the Alpine Club Gallery last month. There were also some Chelsea scenes of much interest, The Unemployed at Chelsea being the title of a canvas admirably representing the grey monotonous colour—but colour all the same—of a thin London fog. But Venice, Bride of the Sea and Palaces in Sunlight were the key to the character of the exhibition.

In our paragraph referring to Mr. Arnold Mitchell's design for a church at Berndorf, of which we gave an illustration in March, the place was spoken of as being in Germany, whereas it is in Lower Austria. Nor, it appears, is Herr Krupp, who commissioned the design, connected with the Essen firm in Germany; he is the proprietor of the Berndorf Metal Works.

Preparations for the next London Salon at the Albert Hall are nearly completed, but we are asked to state that there is still room for some architects and sculptors and a very limited number of painters. The membership of the Association now numbers several hundreds, and judging by the report presented to the annual meeting of shareholders at the end of March the venture is proving

"THE GOOSE GIRL" (In the late Sir John Day's Collection) BY J. F. MILLET

"MARCH"

BY GEORGE HOUSTON, A.R.S.A.

a greater success than was anticipated, even by its sympathisers. The cardinal principle of the Association is of course the elimination of the selective jury, but the services of a hanging committee cannot well be dispensed with. At the annual meeting a novel mode of selecting the hanging committee was decided on, a proposal put forward by Mr. Walter Sickert being carried by a large majority, that all members should be invited in rotation to serve, the invitations being issued in alphabetical order, year by year, until the entire register has been exhausted.

At the Ryder Gallery Mr. Carl Breitensen's exhibition introduced us to a landscape artist of feeling and eminently skilful. Other exhibitions of interest during the month were the water-colours of China, by Mr. J. Hodgson Liddell, at the Fine Art Society; at the same place, Miss Evelyn Whyley's Water-colours of Mountains and Lakes, and at the Doré Gallery Mr. Rodolphe d'Erlanger's pictures and portraits and Miss Linnie Watt's paintings. The Ridley Art Club, with admission by invitation, opening for its week at the end of March, provided those who had friends among its members with the opportunity of studying some interesting work.

EDINBURGH.—A vacancy in the membership of the Royal Scottish Academy was caused this spring by Mr. George Henry's retirement to the honorary list, caused through his residence in London, and the ranks of the associates have been strengthened by the addition of three members. As regards academic rank that honour has fallen to a figure and portrait painter. One of the new associates is a painter of both figure and landscape with occasional essays in portraiture, and the other two are landscapists.

Mr. Henry W. Kerr, the new Academician, has within the past few years almost wholly devoted himself to portrait work, which he practices both in oil and water-colour, and two fine examples in the latter medium are in the present Royal Scottish Academy Exhibition. In portraiture Mr. Kerr is suave and refined; while free in his brushwork his skilful draughtsmanship is ever evident, and while

"ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN THE MORNING"

BY HENRY W. KERR, R.S.A.

his colour is truthful he is never led away by the blandishments of the colour sense to neglect form or overlook those subtle touches that in line as truly as in colour can convey the real inwardness of the subject. No doubt this attention to form was developed by the years of study in the portrayal of the characteristics of the devout Lowland Scot, and the national features of the Irish peasant. In his sketches of the typical Hibernian, Mr. Kerr is a worthy successor of the late Erskine Nicol. The inspiration to study Irish life and character came quite suddenly. Mr. Kerr had been working at Pitlessie, Wilkie's native village, the beadle of which was a useful model to him, and in his pawky way took credit for being the making of the young artist. In his studio one day he was visited by a poor Irishman whose attitude suggested the picture Mr. Kerr afterwards painted and called The Bashful Wooer. The picture was painted in 1887, and was succeeded by The Connemara Bailiff, St. Patrick's Day in the Morning, and many other studies which show as true an appreciation of the humour and pathos of the Irish peasant as Carleton's literary sketches.

Mr. Kerr's series of Scottish life and character are no less truthful. They show altogether different traits and are mostly serious and devout. The Minister's Man and The Day at the Plate are sketches of the disappearing "Auld Licht" Presbyterian who imbibed his religion with his porridge and held fast to them both through life. His Kirk Collection, The Loupin on Stane, and many other drawings which can be named are chronicles of customs that have almost disappeared. In his Scottish series Mr. Kerr has accomplished a great work as a chronicler. But his drawings are not merely the portrayal of externals and incidentals, they are the outcome of intimate knowledge with no theatrical touch or taint of caricature or extravagance of emphasis.

In the election of the three associates the Academy has shown itself to be a national institution. There was a strong list of waiting claimants, the

"WHEN THE BOATS COME IN"

BY MARSHALL BROWN, A.R.S.A.

"THE BRAES OF ATHOLL"
BY W. M. FRAZER, A.R.S.A.

(The property of Wm. Hunter, Esq.)

Studio-Talk

majority of whom were Edinburgh men. One of the new associates is a native of Edinburgh, another belongs to Ayrshire, and the third to Perth. Mr. Marshall Brown, the Edinburgh associate, showed good draughtsmanship in the Academy Life School, where he won the Stuart prize and Chalmers bursary. He was one of the original members of the Scottish Artists' Society and was recently the Chairman of its Council. A good deal of his earlier work was the outcome of study in the Highlands, but latterly he has devoted his energies to work on the Berwickshire and East Lothian coast. Indeed, he may almost be said to have made his summer home at Cockenzie, a little fishing village some ten miles east from Edinburgh, where the modern trawler is yet unknown, and the old picturesque customs and garb of the line fishermen still exist. The illustration accompanying this note gives one of the most typical of these fisher life studies, the principal figure carrying the creel is the belle of the village, a fine compound of rustic beauty and muscularity. Child life he has admirably presented in Seaside Roses and Wild Roses, both of which have recently been reproduced in THE STUDIO. Mr. Brown has aimed at a healthy and unmannered realism. His figures are instinct with life, and their landscape setting is always appropriate. His compositions, though as a rule simple and not burdened with detail, do not sacrifice what will contribute to artistic completeness, and his distances convey the sense of space and the feeling of atmosphere.

Commencing his artistic career as a lithographic artist and illustrator, Mr. George Houston is one of the most individualistic of the younger school of Glasgow artists. His work has been recognised by the municipality of the western city in their purchase of a large landscape for the Kelvingrove Galleries. Though he has worked a good deal at Lochgoilhead his favourite field of study is the Dalry district of Ayrshire, of which he is a native. His Seed Time in Ayrshire, shown at the Franco-British Exhibition last year, and acquired by Preston Corporation, is typical of his style. He is keenly observant and analytic, not depending greatly on chiaroscuro for his effects, and his colour is rich and well laid down. Spring, autumn and winter effects he has carefully studied, and the floating mist on a hillside, the watery atmosphere so characteristic of November weather, with its bleaching influence on colour, or the chilly, half melted snow lying in patches on the brown fields, he suggests with much skill. Mr. Houston is a member of the Royal Scottish Society of Water-colour Painters and the Society of Twenty-five of London.

Mr. W. M. Frazer, the son of a Perth magistrate, came to Edinburgh in the early eighties, and four years later was joint Keith prizeman with Mr. Duddingstone Herdman, his picture entitled Glow Before Decay, being afterwards acquired by the Royal Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland. He has been abroad a good deal and recently visited Huntingdon and Cambridgeshire. One result of his English expedition is the beautiful evening landscape St. Ives, now in the Royal Scottish Academy Exhibition. Conti

"IN SUMMER TIME"

BY FRANCIS H. NEWBERRY

(See Glasgow Studio-Talk)

"A THAW"

(See Glasgow Studio-Talk)

BY GEORGE HOUSTON, A.R.S.A.

mental or English subjects, however, have not supplied him with the motif for his finest work. He is most at home in the varied scenery of his native country. He came into prominence by the first of a beautiful series of pictures of the reedy banks of the lower reaches of the Tay, a picture which was much admired for its fine tone and the pearly quality of its greys. The Braes of Atholl and A Highland Pastoral, the last named reproduced in THE STUDIO, in October, 1908, are typical of his Highland landscapes, in which we have great expanses of open pastoral country leading up to majestic hills. While his composition is effective he looks at nature less with the eye of the draughtsman, more with that of the poet, striving after subtlety, the realisation of the enveloping atmosphere, and in the finest of his work one feels the poetry of the evening glow, much as we feel it when in front of one of Mr. Lawton Wingate's canvases. The human figure does not intrude on his native solitudes, the air is still and calm, the silence of hill and valley is undisturbed. His forte is repose. A characteristic feature of his wooded landscapes is the filmy impressionism of the tree forms. Mr. Frazer was, during the year ended in March, the Chairman of the Scottish Artists' Society. A. E.

GLASGOW.—The forty-eighth Annual Exhibition of the Fine Art Institute opened this year under the most favourable auspices. Since the last exhibition local interest in art has been stimulated by the publication of two notable works on the Scottish school; by the opening of a new wing in the extension of the School of Art; and by the acquisition of works by Jessie M. King and George Houston by the Walker Art Gallery, Liverpool, and the Corporation of Preston. The imminence of the Institute's jubilee is also tending to direct attention to its work.

It is a question whether the present exhibition is more remarkable for landscape or figure painting. There are quite a dozen men, equally divided between the two sections, who have never contributed finer work to a public exhibition. William

"A WHITE COCK"

BY GEORGE PIRIE

Wells, R.B.A., has captured the crüics, as he has captured a gleam of unmitigated daylight, in his fine, robustly-radiant canvas, A Lancashire Fishing Village. Clear, incisive air appeals to him, the invigorating, mist-dispersing air, familiar to our west-shore land ; and all the greyiness of dawn, and the mystic hour of eventide, so dear to many brother artists, are made to appear as of quite another climate beside the rarefied brilliance of this notable landscape, which has been purchased by the Modern Arts Association.

In quite another vein is Woods after a Storm, by J. Lawton Wingate, R.S.A. ; a poetic treatment of a charming sylvan theme. In natural colouring, freedom of brush work, and atmospheric effect, it is unsurpassed in all the exhibition. Close by there hangs a characteristic work by William MacBride, with the grey trees with russet foliage, and the cerulean water, so assiduously sought out by this artist. There is quite a definite note of colour in The Wood Nymph, a loaned picture, by the late Sir E. Burne-Jones, set conspicuously in the centre of an end wall, a fine study for the young figure and decorative painter. Its clever variation on viridian green is a monochromatic triumph. To right and left there hang two diverse treatments of a similar subject—Early Winter, by James Kay, R.S.W., a departure for an artist who has made the bustling Clyde his own ; and A Thaw, by George Houston, A.R.S.A., one of those keen, penetrative nature-studies this observant artist has taught us to expect, and in An Ayrshire Glen, by the same artist, we have a poetic rendering of Nature in a gentler mood. J. Brownlie Docherty pursues his favourite theme on a large canvas, with appropriate title, Highland Landscape. In lovely Glen Morriston the artist has selected a typical Inverness-shire scene—a tumbling trout-stream, with well-wooded banks, abundant with the growth of autumnal-tinted bracken—and its romantic charm is suggested in such a way as few Scottish landscapists can rival.

Dominating the centre room in size and position is Pan's Sanctuary, by J. L. Pickering, but it is a debatable point whether the interest in the picture has not been lessened by the elimination of the piper. Other striking landscapes are The Gipsy Camp, by E. A. Walton, R.S.A., a rhythm of blue and green; Plain Land, by Louis Grier, delightful in decorative feeling; Pas de Calais, by H. Hughes-Stanton, with fine sea and sky effect; The Rhymer's Glen, by Archibald Kay, R.S.W., with clever handling of early autumn foliage, and the misty charm of highland ravine; The Sun peeped o'er yon Southland Hills, by Joseph Farquharson, A.R.A., remarkable for the golden glow of the morning sun on the untrodden snow on the mountain side; and a thoughtful rendering of a woodland scene by F. Spenlove Spenlove. Mr. Kay's picture just mentioned has been purchased by the Corporation for the permanent collection.

Studio-Talk

Amongst the portraits and figure subjects The Velvet Cloak, by Sir James Guthrie, P.R.S.A., attracts for many reasons; the pose is striking, the velvet drapery convincing, drawing from another noted portrait painter the confession, "The best black I have ever seen in paint." There are two figure studies more arresting to artist than layman, because of the absolute cleverness of treatment. Miss Lillah Macarthy, in the Dress of Dona Ana, by Charles Shannon, a work already reproduced in THE STUDIO, and Silk and Ermine, by George Henry, A.R.A., R.S.A. No two studies could be more dissimilar; in the one there is the delightful handling of beautiful colour contrasts, in the other the complete mastery of monochromatic monotony. No less than Whistler and Melville, Henry has discovered that a grey gown or a reddish-brown skirt placed against a background of similar tone, permits the eye to rest on the subject of the picture, without the irritation of distraction. In Silk and Ermine this idea is emphasised, and additional appropriateness is given by the style of dress and that of the cleverly-painted panelling being contemporaneous in period.

In the centre room there are two interesting

"A LANCASHIRE FISHING VILLAGE"

BY WILLIAM WELLS, R.B.A.

Studio-Talk

portraits, one by William Cunningham Hector, a new rôle for this clever young Glasgow artist ; another by P. A. Hay, R.S.W., one of our most assiduous portraitists. In the upper galleries the charmingly executed Portrait of Miss Brown, by Maurice Grieffenhagen, is unjustly treated by the hanging committee. The clever pastel portrait of Miss Reta Macalister, by G. G. Anderson, is a striking example of the work of an artist with a future in portraiture. E. A. Hornel is represented by three of his charming colour harmonies, in which the figures are filled in with greater definiteness and the tints with more alluringness than before. A picture that claims attention is Mr. Francis Newbery's In Summer Time (p. 314), in which a difficult problem has been well handled.

William Pratt sends one of those thoughtful studies of peasant life and habit that proclaim him a sincere and earnest follower of Millet. In his Homeward the weary workers wend their way homeward from the fields when the sky assumes the shadows of the evening hour. It is a thousand pities that George Pirie is so modest in his contributions. A White Cock is too meagre a representation of the work of such a thorough artist. There is no mistaking the feathered fowl, the whole presentment is instinct with the atmosphere of the farmyard.

In sculpture, architecture, and black and-white there are interesting contributions. The model of George Buchanan, by A. McF. Shannan, A.R.S.A., suggested by the quatercentenary of the early Scottish man of letters, is a fine example of the penetrative method of the sculptor entrusted with the important commission of modelling a statue to the memory of the great scientist Kelvin. Amongst other interesting exhibits in this section are works by Percy Portsmouth, A.R.S.A., and John Tweed. J. T.

PARIS.—At the Dewambez Gallery the exhibition of the Société des Peintres et Graveurs de Paris Moderne engaged much of our attention. The majority of these artists belonged to the Société des Peintres de Paris, but separated from this body in order to form a still more exclusive group. They had here an ensemble of really remarkable works depicting the beauties of the capital. Of the two

MODEL FOR STATUE OF GEORGE BUCHANAN (1506-1582)

BY A. MCF. SHANNAN, A.R.S.A.

"LA SEINE AU PONT DES SAINTS-PÈRES"

BY FRANK BOGGS

"LA CITÉ"

BY FRANK BOGGS

"A CASTLE IN SWITZERLAND"

BY WILLIAM S. HORTON

seniors of the Society, Lepère and Billotte, the former showed several pictures which were on view last spring at the Nationale and an important series of plates and wood engravings which displayed to advantage his conscientious observation and his sureness of execution. M. René Billotte showed also a series of works which were doubly interesting, first on account of their exquisite colouring, and secondly because they perpetuate aspects of certain quarters of Paris which have now disappeared. It is most interesting and at the same time most enjoyable to wander with these artists among the wonders and the curiosities of the great city—to view with Jules Adler and Réjot the Luxembourg, with Chapuis the Pont-Neuf and Ivry, with Dufresne the circuses and theatres, with Fougousse and Gabriel Rousseau the Boulevards, with Louis Gillot the banks of the Seine, with Gaston Prunier the faubourgs and the factories, and the bridges with Vauthrin and Serval. Mr. Frank Boggs has been most successful with his luminous little landscapes; he is of all our painters the one who most reminds us of Jongkind, and the State has acquired for the Luxembourg one of the works which we herewith reproduce.

William S. Horton, who has attracted a good deal of attention at the Salons of the Société Nationale and at the Salon d'Automne the last few years, has had an important exhibition at Petit's Galleries. Horton has made his speciality the Swiss cantons about the Lake of Geneva, the neighbourhood of Montreux and Vevey, sleeping villages, trees powdered with hoar-frost, fields sprinkled with rime, snow-clad roofs, romantic castles. Born at Grand Rapids (Michigan), he was in Paris a pupil of Benjamin Constant; but in truth he evolved for himself his own technique by faithful and loving study of Nature herself. This

"HÔTEL DE VILLE, MARSEILLES" (DRAWING)

BY FÉLIX ZIEM

"CATHÉDRALE D'AMIENS" (WATER-COLOUR)

BY FÉLIX ZIEM

it is that gives to his work its individuality and its great charm, and so one does not wonder at the successes achieved of recent years by this artist, whose pictures are to be found in the private collection of the King of Spain, in the Musée du Luxembourg, and in the Musée Carnavalet.

Following its custom of holding an exhibition each spring, the Société des Peintres et Sculpteurs

(formerly known as the Société Nouvelle) has had this year a show at Georges Petit's which was crowned with the greatest success. This year we admired in particular the large panel by Besnard, depicting some girls and swans frolicking in the crystal waters of the lake of Annecy, a work which on account of the freedom of its execution and its distinguished colouring is of premier importance. Baertsoen, who has not shown every year with the Société Nouvelle, exhibited a painting, robust in colour, of an old castle; M. Claus was represented by some landscapes full of force and impassioned in execution. M. Blanche, not content with signing an excellent portrait of himself, also showed us some very beautiful interiors treated with great freedom. Cottet, Dauchez, and Simon remained true to their Breton subjects, and René Ménard showed some most finished works, at once admirable in composition and seductive in colouring. H. F.

The 88th anniversary of the painter Félix Ziem has been celebrated at Nice by a brilliant exhibition of his work. His name fires our hearts with the remembrance of those countless pictures of which the flight of time has failed to dim the brilliance or to sap the strength.

"THE DANCE" (BRONZE RELIEF) (See Vienna Studio Talk) BY EMIL MEIER

"SUMMER" (FAYENCE) BY EMIL MEIER

that point of perfection of which Balzac speaks, and behind which there lurks the talent which is the attribute alone of genius. L. H.

VIENNA. — Emil Meier and Johanna Meier-Michel are two talented young artists who have thrown in their lots together. Both are natives of Bohemia, but German by race, and both are past students of the Vienna Imperial Arts and Crafts Schools, though they arrived there by different roads. Emil Meier, after having passed satisfactorily through the elementary school in his native village, was sent to the "Fachschule," in Turnau, Bohemia, to study and acquire what was necessary to equip him for the craft of goldsmith. He showed so much talent that he was offered a small stipend to continue his studies in Vienna. In pursuing his craft Emil Meier learnt to appreciate the value of metals and their possibilities from the designer's point of view, and the knowledge thus acquired enabled him to carry out his own designs in metals. The Dance, reproduced on p. 321, is a fine proof of his capabilities in both directions. The figures are well formed and full of grace and charm. His two fayence figures here

The fair dream of his existence has become almost an apotheosis, to the great joy of his friends and the numerous admirers of his work, that splendid work of which we get a very exalted opinion after visiting the exhibition organised for the benefit of the Orphelinat des Arts. First of all it is the Queen of the Adriatic which Ziem, with all his wonderful gifts of æsthetic expression, conjures up and re-creates in all her old-time splendour — "Venice, which Ziem saw," asserts Théophile Gautier, "not merely as painter, but also as poet. Not to Lord Byron, not to De Musset, nor to George Sand," adds this critic, "was it given better than to him to understand her mysterious charm and fascinating beauty." Next it is the shores of the Bosphorus which he depicts for us; then Asia with her ancient ruins, the last vestiges of forgotten civilisations; Egypt with the obelisk of Luxor and the temple of Cleopatra; Holland with the banks of the Scheldt all full of fine harmony. He also gave us views of Marseilles, Antibes, the Carmargue, of Martigues, of Toulon, of the Forest of Fontainebleau, Amiens, and even of Montmartre with picturesque silhouettes of the old mills. Whatever the subject, the works of Ziem bear the stamp of a master-hand; he touches

"AUTUMN" (FAYENCE) BY EMIL MEIER

"EGYPTIAN FLOWER-GIRL" (FAYENCE)
BY JOHANNA MEIER-MICHEL

reproduced form part of a set representing the four seasons. These have been executed in the Wiener Keramik-Werkstätte, belonging to two distinguished artists, Michel Powolny and Berthold Löffler, the latter a professor at the Imperial Arts and Crafts Schools.

Johanna Meier-Michel studied first under Professor Kaufungen at the Kunstschule für Frauen und Mädchen, Vienna, and later under Professor Schwarz at the Imperial Arts and Crafts School, where she likewise held a stipend. It is in the art of the sculptor that her chief talent lies. The bust of a little child reproduced on p. 324 shows not only true artistic feeling but also an intimate knowledge of child life. Her fayence, too, shows how capable she is. The Egyptian flower-girl, with her basket destined to be filled with violets, and the fruit-stand with the little children moving around it, are both admirable examples of her work in this direction. Frau Meier has also been successful in larger works of sculpture. She won the first prize in open competition with a model for a monument at Leipa, Bohemia, and this brought her another commission, again for a monument in the same little town, for in Bohemia, as in Austria, even the small towns and villages love to show their appreciation of their great men by erecting monuments or busts to their memory, and of course their liberality in this respect acts as a great encouragement to young artists. A. S. L.

BERLIN.—Berlin is now in a phase of growing self-confidence and this state is indicated by retrospects. It betrays the conviction of personal weight when facts from our past are treated with the importance of historical materials. The Biedermeier renaissance, and the interest taken in everything connected with old Berlin, are symptoms of this phase. The Märkische Museum stands newly erected within our city, plays from former times rule the stage, books full of the flavour of witty and romantic days are favourites, and the aureoles of real Berlin artists like Chodowiecki, Hosemann and Franz Krüger have been re-gilt. The Royal Academy has now done such service to its former president, the sculptor Gottfried Schadow, by arranging, with the valuable assistance of the renowned Schadow scholar, Professor Hans Mackowsky, a comprehensive Schadow exhibition within its galleries. The name of this sculptor and draughtsman, the author of the

FAYENCE FLOWER-STAND, BY JOHANNA MEIER-MICHEL

PORTRAIT BUST BY JOHANNA MEIER-MICHEL

"Polyklet," still so highly valued by sculptors, figures among our classics, but we are thankful that traditional formulas are again filled with living knowledge. Many of his national and classical monuments and reliefs, portrait-busts and drawings, have always been popular; but it was good to remind people that one of the treasures of sepulchral art—the beautiful marble memorial of the young Count von der Mark, the son of King Frederick Wilhelm II. and Countess Lichtenau—ornaments one of our Berlin churches. In studying the exhibits we felt rather puzzled by the mixture of a Hellenic artist and a confirmed naturalist, an aristocrat and a bourgeois, an adorer and a caricaturist; but the predominance of genius has often welded such contradictions with harmony. Whilst Christian Rauch persevered in the nobility of the classical style, Schadow became the independent leader who departed from rococo affectations and restrictions of the antique type and looked straight into the face of nature. Some of his masterly portrait-busts especially convince us of this individual attitude. The homage of our time is due to a master who declared that "the good and true imitator of nature is on the right road to beauty."

Berlin art circles are really thankful for the opportunity to study the life-work of Hans von Marées at the Secession. A quick walk through the rooms impresses one with the conviction that we have here to deal with great art. Only names of some of the powerful, like Signorelli and Böcklin, and the forms of the Parthenon come to mind in face of these pictures. The great style is also visible in the brushwork, as the use of colour and varnish is often so plentiful that the surface with its deeply sunk contours has the aspect of a relief. Even when the strokes are merely swept over the canvas they mostly testify to an energetic will, and deep-toned colour symphonies recall the music of Titian or Rembrandt. The two motifs—man and horse—are continually repeated, and Marées loves to place them within a landscape-frame of pathetic beauty. Some of the portraits

"FRAU ROTTMANN & DAUGHTER" (DRAWING IN BLACK & RED CHALK & PENCIL) BY GOTTFRIED SCHADOW

(Original in possession of the Royal Academy, Berlin)

"THE MUSE." FROM THE COLOURED
CHALK DRAWING BY GOTTFRIED SCHADOW

Studio-Talk

arrest the attention by their compelling expression, proclaiming their painter's capability of reading and mirroring souls like G. F. Watts, but such happy realisations are not frequent. The faces of the nudes are strangely neglected, as the sculptural aspect of the body is the supreme aim of this art, and we can understand that Marées' truest followers are sculptors. As a fresco-painter he also strove after repose and clearness, but did not possess the power of the great composer who dominates masses. What he painted in a happy mood astonishes us by freedom and strength, by the rhythmic elasticity of movement, as in his beautiful group of rowers, the central piece of the most original fresco in the Aquarium of Naples. Before such an inspiration, as before the life breathed in his drawings, we realise more keenly his habitual gloom, his wrestlings with the materials which a whole Marées exhibition exposes like an Icarus fate. We study endless attempts and repetitions; loftiness of principle often seems carried to extremes and simplicity appears as dulness. The harvest of masterworks is rather small, and in most cases we have to content ourselves with the will instead of the deed, yet this strange artist cannot be placed otherwise than with the Titans of German art.

At Keller and Reiner's Salon the works of Professor Paul Peterich at once commanded attention. A careful study of the antique, especially of the pre-Phidias time, is his distinguishing feature, but sternness is coupled with grace. His statue of Beauty, a female nude, is quite deserving of its name, but the treatment of the hair in the archaic style does not seem favourable for the rendering of such fluffy masses.

In the Cassirer Salon Professor Max Liebermann showed the last results of his labour, some portraits of his usual strength and sobriety, a quantity of views from the summer-beach in Noordroyk, and drawings and etchings from Dutch life. He remains faithful to impressionism, and is capturing the very life of brightest atmosphere and of men in broad and thick-laid strokes, which want distance to be fully appreciated. The relief work of his surface is somewhat smoothed down by the glass cover. With this robustness of brushwork, generally applied to small-size paintings, the artist combines a colourism of unique distinction. His delicate values afford rare treats for the eye, and the most bewitching combination is accomplished in his Flower Garden.

Schulte's Salon offered a new collection of Laszlo portraits which regained old sympathies for a certainly lovable master. He had disappointed us in preceding exhibits, but we can again hail him as the hand that renders sympathetically and with distinction. Laszlo's art seems to carefully evade modernism, but we have no proof that capabilities are lacking. He knowingly cultivates old-master methods, and considers repose the most desirable feature. He has just now accom-

"PILGRIMS" (DRAWING)

(See Moscow Studio-Talk, p. 328.)

BY SERGE KOROVIN

(See Moscow Studio Talk)

"THE ARRIVAL OF THE BOYAR." BY SERGE IVANOFF

Studio-Talk

plished the best portrait of the German Empress existing, a work full of dignified bearing which brings out beautifully the qualities of superior womanhood ripened in an atmosphere of stern self-control. The portrait of the Princess Louise Victoria represents happily "sweet seventeen," with roguishness concealed beneath languor. A breath of rococo freshness wafts from the new decorative portraits of the Crown Prince and the Crown Princess, which betray no embellishing intention, merely the will to bring out youthful elasticity.

The Königliche Kunstgewerbe Museum has been treating lovers of Japanese art to an exhibition of the treasures in the possession of Consul Mosé. Within the stylish arrangement of real Japanese interiors we had a rare occasion to study exquisite weapons, armour, cabinets, writing-cases and wood-cuts. Refined taste and the eye of the connoisseur of marvellous techniques controlled the selection, and the result was to again strongly impress one with the superiority of Eastern arts and crafts.

J. J.

MOSCOW.—This year's exhibition of the "Soyouz," or Union of Russian Artists, which was installed in the fine spacious rooms of what was once a private palace, may be considered to have been, on the whole, a most successful event. This estimate holds good more especially of the figure compositions and portraits, for the landscape painters, while quantitatively well represented, offered little of conspicuous note from an artistic point of view and by no means formed the centre of attraction on this occasion.

Of three portraits contributed by the painter Séroff, his double portrait of two noted Moscow actors gave the least satisfaction, but in that of a lady of Oriental type this artist reached his highest point, in spite of the somewhat violent juxtaposition of a cushion of bright red and dark blue constituting the background. L. Pasternak was exceptionally well represented as a painter this year, and in the entire œuvre of this artist are to be found few portraits so monumental in conception and so genuinely beautiful in colour as his portrait of Madame O. G. Among other subjects his interesting auto-portrait should be named, as well as a fine historic genre picture of the period of Peter the Great. B. Kustodieff, who has hitherto not always joined artistic perception with his great technical facility, showed marked progress in his portrait of an abbess and in his market scenes. The same may be said of Tarkhoff, a painter who lives in Paris; his somewhat insistent facture is now less pronounced, and his figure paintings, representing domestic scenes, are expressive of much inner fervour and quiet joy of colour. Répin junior sent an interesting little family portrait.

PORTRAIT OF MADAME O. G.

BY L. PASTERNAK

Art School Notes

As regards the pictorial treatment of incidents in old Russian life, mention should in the first place be made of the young painter, S. Ivanoff. This artist pays little heed to archæological reconstruction and niceties of costume, but has the faculty of grasping the essential character of the period, and it is this which gives such value to his broadly painted historic sketches. An admirable reflection of typical Russian life in the seventeenth century is to be seen in his work depicting the arrival of a boyar among the country people. E. Lanceray also appeared in a historic garb with a series of extremely attractive and finely composed illustrations which he has executed for an important publication on the subject of the Imperial palaces in St. Petersburg and its vicinity. Lanceray may, without exaggeration, be described as the Russian Menzel. Somoff's pièce de résistance consisted of some charming illustrations to a book published in Munich—the "Lesebuch der Marquise"—and offered an additional fascination in his beautifully delineated portrait of Lanceray, as well as in some other drawings in which as always he showed himself a master. A. Benois, Bakst and Dobuzhinsky showed some of their earlier productions of no great importance.

Among the younger members of the "Soyouz," Sapunoff occupied a prominent place. His marked talent for colour is developing most happily, and the rich, ample colour-harmonies of his festal gatherings and floral displays proved a veritable feast for every eye susceptible to good painting. Krymoff has not yet found himself, and contented himself this time with compositions showing a certain affectation for the primitive. Sudeikin, too, strives to be naïve, but this naïveté, which gives to the pictures of our great-grandmothers their charm, is here not natural, and leaves the spectator cold. A new comer to Moscow was N. Petroff with his masterly but unexciting interiors in water-colour.

In landscape, as already remarked, it was the juste milieu which prevailed. Almost the only things of particular note were a sympathetic winter landscape by Meshcherin, a bouquet of delphiniums, steeped in colour, by Grabar, and some pictures by K. Korovin and Youon. Sculpture was chiefly represented by Stelletski, whose large polychrome bust of Leonardo da Vinci must at any rate be regarded as an important work, although the barock mode of gilding the hair seemed scarcely congruous with the general character of the bust, which is Florentine. Much interest centred in some delightful wood-carvings by Madame Ostroumova-Lebedeff, mostly views of St. Petersburg, which, both as regards delineation and colour, gave proof of the refined and mature taste of this gifted artist.

The posthumous exhibition of works by Serge Korovin (brother of Konstantin Korovin), who died last year, evoked a feeling of disappointment. Serge Korovin left behind nothing of particular importance, but he was a modest, genial artist, whose strength lay especially in draughtsmanship. In certain small genre-like transcripts of Russian life he struck a lyric note peculiar to himself, and this gave them a very pleasing effect, which was shared by his studies and variations of Russian pilgrims.

P. E.

ART SCHOOL NOTES.

LONDON.—In May, the art-student, weary of indoor light after a long winter's work in the life school, begins to get ready his sketching-easel and its accompanying paraphernalia, and to make plans for painting in the fields. The lengthening days, the lovely evenings that fill with charm the streets even of the most prosaic town, and the developing colour of flower and foliage, combine to arouse in him new hopes and ambitions. Of the experiences of last year the student recalls only the joys, forgetting the peculiar difficulties that encompass painting in the open air and his previous failures to render the atmosphere and colour of a landscape. Of course, if he has the feeling of the true artist he will always fail to reach the standard of achievement that is in his mind, but he will have a better chance of relative success if he allows his earlier efforts to be guided by one who has walked longer in the same paths. And perhaps there is no better way of obtaining such guidance than to join one of the summer classes held by artists who have made outdoor painting a special study.

The summer outdoor class now forms a part of the regular curriculum of the larger private art schools in London, and most of them have by now completed their arrangements for the forthcoming season. Mr. Walter Donne, of the Grosvenor Studio, Vauxhall Bridge, intends to take his class again to Berneval, a village in whose locality such masters as Lhermitte, Cazin, and Thaulow have found the material for many sketches and studies. Berneval, which is not far from Dieppe and close to the sea, offers to the artist an infinite variety of subject, and the Grosvenor students will be given special opportunities of studying the figure in its relation to landscape. On this point, the importance of which is not sufficiently appreciated by many landscape painters, Mr. Donne lays great stress. Apart from the daily lesson Mr. Donne gives once a week a general criticism of all the work done by the class. A large house has been taken for the students for July and August. It will be superintended by the secretary of the Grosvenor Studio, and so far as the expenses of board are concerned will be conducted on a co-operative basis.

Art School Notes

—
Last year the students of the London School of Art, Stratford Road, Kensington, painted at Bruges for many weeks under the general direction of Mr. Frank Brangwyn, A.R.A., but this summer, starting on July 20th, they are going farther afield to the little mountain town of Assisi, a few miles from Perugia. Assisi, full of memories of St. Francis and Giotto, offers rare possibilities to the painter. Perched as it is on a hill with fine old buildings and many Roman remains, the student has only to step outside the hotel to find subjects about him on every side. Though small, Assisi possesses a very large studio, built for some forgotten purpose by the municipality, and this studio Mr. C. P. Townsley, the director of the London Art School, has been fortunate enough to secure for the use of his students. A costume model will pose three days a week either in the studio or in the open air, and Mr. Brangwyn will give three criticisms each week on the landscape studies, the studies from the costume model, and the work of the composition class. Six weeks will be spent painting at Assisi, and at the end of that time, early in September, the homeward journey will be commenced. This journey, however, is part of the scheme of instruction. It will occupy rather more than a fortnight, and in its course the cities and galleries of Siena, Florence, Venice, Padua, Verona and Milan will be visited and studied. The teaching staff of the London School of Art has just been strengthened by the addition to its ranks of Mr. George W. Lambert.

—
At the St. John's Wood Art Schools the open-air classes commence this month at Pinner, where, it may be recalled, Mrs. Allingham found some of the most remarkable of the old cottages that figure so frequently in her sympathetic little pictures of rural England. The Pinner class, which is for water-colour painters, is conducted by Mr. Leonard Walker, a cousin of the late Fred Walker. Its course will extend over six weeks, and early in July Mr. C. M. Q. Orchardson, R.I., will begin his classes for oil and water-colour painting in the open air at Rye in Sussex. Rye, which is one of the most paintable places in England, is familiar ground to some of the St. John's Wood School students, as Mr. Orchardson took the class there in 1906. In the two intervening years the classes were held at Frensham in Surrey, and some good landscapes painted by the students in that locality were shown in the exhibition held at the school a few months ago. The Rye class will probably have the benefit of the advice of Mr. F. D. Walenn, in addition to that of Mr. Orchardson, who will make his headquarters at the Mermaid Inn.

—
The country class of the School of Animal Painting, Baker Street, will commence on July 12th, but Mr. Calderon, at the time this note was written, had not made up his mind which to choose of the two or three eligible localities whose claims he was considering. The class will, however, be

EMBROIDERED PANEL WITH BEADWORK
BY MISS DOUGLAS
(Glasgow School of Art)

Art School Notes

EMBROIDERED PANEL: "MORNING GLORY"

(Glasgow School of Art)

BY MISS HOGG

held as in other years within easy reach of a farm, where barns and sheds offer shelter to work in when the weather is unfavourable, and where animal models are available. Landscape is studied in the summer session of the Baker Street school, but the chief energies of the pupils are naturally directed towards the painting of animals amid their own natural surroundings. This is the great object of the summer class of the School of Animal Painting, and although a picturesque locality is desirable the choice of the right kind of farm is even more important. Fortunately it is not difficult in England to find in combination both the needful qualifications. Former pupils at Baker Street will be interested to hear that a scheme is on foot to form a society of past and present students of the School of Animal Painting, and in connection with this society to hold each year, in June, an exhibition of pictures and studies. Each member will be entitled to submit three works to the judgment of the selecting committee, and to a certain number of tickets of admission to the exhibition for distribution among their friends. The subscription will be five shillings a year, and Miss C. M. Sprott, 78 Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., is the treasurer.

Some excellent work was shown at the annual exhibition of the Sketch Club at the Westminster School of Art. It was probably the best exhibition of the kind that has been held at the school, and it is satisfactory to know that it attracted many hundreds of visitors. Among the best things shown were Miss Gertrude Crompton's water-colour landscapes, the tinted etchings by Mrs. Eleanor Fell, A.R.E., and a large oil painting by Miss Uellina W. A. Parkes, The Hesperides. With the Sketch Club work was shown a selection of the studies executed in the school during the preceding year, and intended for the forthcoming National Art Competition.

During June Mr. George Clausen will be the Visitor at the Royal Academy in the Schools both of Drawing and Painting. Mr. Hamo Thornycroft will visit the School of Sculpture. In the School of Architecture Mr. T. G. Jackson will be the Visitor until the 21st of the present month, when he will be succeeded by Mr. J. Belcher. W. T. W.

GLASGOW.—The announcement of an exhibition of work by the students at the Glasgow School of Art is sufficient to create widespread interest at any time; when the work shown is by members of "The Club," the interest is no less keen, for some of the most distinguished former students are both members and contributors. This year additional attraction was offered by the fine and applied art exhibits being arranged in a portion of the new wing, improvised as a picture gallery by the introduction of canvas over the brick walls, and cross screens and cases to accommodate the three hundred and eighteen examples of work sent in. The completed front elevation of the school is now one of the most strikingly unique pieces of architecture in the city, as one would expect, being the work of Charles R. Mackintosh. Inside it is no less remarkable, and when completed and opened in September, there will be few schools so well adapted to the study of art as that at Glasgow.

Reviews and Notices

The successful students secured the following prizes: Sir Francis Powell's prizes, for landscape in water-colour, Chas. H. Scott; for landscape in water-colour with figures, Howard Elcock. Sir Jas. Flemming's prizes, for landscape in oil, David L. Adam; for landscape, with architecture, in oil, R. Currie Robertson. Mr. A. N. Paterson's prize for Nature study, M. Gilmore M'Iroy; Mr. Arthur Kay's prize for painted study of draped model, J. C. M'Hutcheon; Mr. W. M'L. Young's prize for landscape with figure, Chas. Aird; Messrs. Winsor & Newton's prize for landscape in oil, with water, Thomas Conn; the Directors' prize, for figure composition, Alma F. M. Assafrey; Mr. John Wordie's prize for etching, John C. M'Hutcheon, and the Club prize for programme cover for an "At Home," Chas. H. Scott. Besides these, other prizes were awarded as follows: for set of architectural sketches, David Robertson; pen-and-ink drawing of some edifice, A. E. H. Miller; embroidery, Phyllis Allan; enamelling, Mary Hogg; silversmith work, Ina D. D. Campbell; and to the Saturday class students, for embroidery, Minnie Blackwood; for oil painting, Thomas Conn; for woodblock, Janie Parkes; and for exhibition poster, Alex. J. Musgrove.

Amongst the more notable work by the honorary members, there was a fine vigorous painting, The Bo'sun, by the popular Director of the School, Mr. Francis H. Newbery, a type Mr. Newbery has handled before with conspicuous success; a set of daintily drawn and coloured book-plates, by Katherine Cameron, R.S.W.; The Angel of the North, by Ann Macbeth, a decorative fancy in the artist's best manner; Gossips, a charmingly naïve study of children in leafy setting, and The Pied Piper, with clever colour combinations, by Annie M. Urquhart; a set of wonderfully fanciful black-and-white drawings, with touches of illumination, by Annie French; one of those spontaneous pastel portraits by Helen Paxton Brown, unmistakably like a talented former student; a set of twelve illustrations to Swinburne's Carols of the Year, distinguished by fine feeling and excellent drawing; with quite a number of other excellent studies in the various mediums.

Amongst the fifty or more examples of metal work and embroidery, the standard of excellence for which the school is noted was well maintained. The accompanying illustrations will give some idea of the quality of work being done in the embroidery class. The butterfly panel by Miss Helen A. Lamb, as our coloured reproduction shows, is a fine example of the new embroidery for which the school is noted. The panel with cross and motto, by Miss Douglas, executed in low tones as befits the subject, is no less striking. On dark grey linen ground, an arrangement in mauve, orange and blue silk, with mingling of emerald-green and silver, outlined with orange-coloured beads, composes in a fine design. Morning Glory, by Miss Hogg, is interesting alike in conception and execution. The angel of the morn emerges from the sun with its golden beams radiating in every direction. She is girdled with floral and pearly loveliness, crowned with golden circlet, robed with beauty and winged with fleetness to carry the joy of brightness to the uttermost parts of the earth. The whole idea is well conveyed, the choice of colours excellent, the treatment admirable. The fine old art of the needle is, after all, a choicer occupation for clever women than some which they take to nowadays. J. T.

REVIEWS AND NOTICES.

The Engraved Work of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. By W. G. RAWLINSON. Vol. I. Line Engravings on Copper, 1794-1839. (London: Macmillan & Co., Limited.) £1 net.—Mr. W. G. Rawlinson laid all lovers and students of the art of Turner under an obligation of gratitude when he published his learned and invaluable work on the "Liber Studiorum." Now he has still further increased their debt by a study and descriptive catalogue of the engraved work of the master, which, for completeness of knowledge and absolute rightness of intuition, is not likely to be surpassed. For the collector, Mr. Rawlinson's book is quite indispensable, while for the student of the methods of engraving, especially the finer and more subtle developments of line engraving mixed with etching, it is rich in learning and suggestion. Perhaps no artist of a genius at all comparable with Turner's ever wrought so much expressly for the same and cases to action. The first and second examples are the most successful, the illustration of the first being especially good. The third is a little less successful, but still good. The fourth is a little less successful, but still good. The fifth is a little less successful, but still good. The sixth is a little less successful, but still good. The seventh is a little less successful, but still good. The eighth is a little less successful, but still good. The ninth is a little less successful, but still good. The tenth is a little less successful, but still good.

The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work.

and the history of the country. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work.

traditions to Switzerland's Carolingian style, distinguished by fine feeling and a sense of rhythm, with quite a number of other excellent examples of the various methods.

Amongst the many or more excellent examples of work and embroidery, the school of the first kind for which the school is particularly well known. The account of the first kind of work is very good. The quality of the work is very good. The first kind of work is very good. The second kind of work is very good. The third kind of work is very good. The fourth kind of work is very good. The fifth kind of work is very good. The sixth kind of work is very good. The seventh kind of work is very good. The eighth kind of work is very good. The ninth kind of work is very good. The tenth kind of work is very good. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work.

REVIEWS AND NOTICES

The Essex and Hertfordshire Antiquarian Society, Vol. I, Part I, No. 1, 1701-1799. London: The Essex and Hertfordshire Antiquarian Society, 1701-1799. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work. The first of these is a very good example of the first kind of work. The second is a very good example of the second kind of work. The third is a very good example of the third kind of work. The fourth is a very good example of the fourth kind of work. The fifth is a very good example of the fifth kind of work. The sixth is a very good example of the sixth kind of work. The seventh is a very good example of the seventh kind of work. The eighth is a very good example of the eighth kind of work. The ninth is a very good example of the ninth kind of work. The tenth is a very good example of the tenth kind of work.

EMBROIDERED PANEL BY HELEN A. LAMB.

Reviews and Notices

interpretation by engraving, and certainly none was ever more intimately associated with his interpreters. For Turner being himself learned and accomplished in the art of engraving, and practically versed in its various technical methods—a valuable asset which he owed to his early training in the workshop of John Raphael Smith—was not only able to adapt his drawings exactly to the capabilities of the point, the graver or the scraper, but knew also how to educate his engravers to see eye to eye with him in the balancing of light and shade. So he formed a school of engravers who made line engraving, under his inspiration, do for the interpretation of landscape more than Vivarés, Canot, Thomas Major, or even the great Woollett himself, had ever dreamed of. Nothing is more instructive than to read the critical injunctions and practical suggestions which Turner used to write on the progress proofs submitted to him by the engravers, and then to compare these with the finished engravings, as one may happily do in the Print Room at the British Museum. For the engravers regarded all these suggestions in the light of commands, knowing the master was always artistically right—right, at least, from the engraver's point of view. On the other hand, as Mr. Rawlinson justly points out, for the sake of brilliancy or "sparkle" in the engraving, Turner would sometimes over-accentuate the small lights to the detriment of pictorial breadth and unity of effect. In his interesting Introduction Mr. Rawlinson tells chronologically the history of Turner's work in connection with the engraver's art, incidentally showing us the great painter's personal and business relations with those patient, industrious, and often hardly-used artists of the copper-plate and the steel. And, surprisingly, Mr. Rawlinson acclaims, as an almost unqualified gain for line engraving, the substitution of the hard steel for the soft copper—a change of which Turner did not avail himself for more than ten years after the introduction of steel plates. Chronological also in arrangement is Mr. Rawlinson's catalogue, and in the same order one may find the prints themselves at the British Museum. So, with this excellent book for guide, the true lover of landscape in pictures may spend his time the more pleasantly and advantageously among the Turner portfolios.

Notes on the Science of Picture Making. By C. J. HOLMES. (London: Chatto & Windus.) 7s. 6d. net.—To all students of art, to professional workers and to amateur enquirers into æsthetic questions, this careful and exhaustive treatise on the science of picture making by the Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford can be unhesitatingly commended. If the book is a little pedantic in manner, and suffers somewhat from the anxiety of the writer to explain and account for the endless varieties of artistic activity, these at any rate are only minor defects and do not appreciably diminish its value as a guide to the better understanding of the principles by which all memorable achievement in pictorial art must be directed. The argument throughout is sane and temperate, inspired by sincere conviction, and presented without any of those affectations and obscurities which have been so often adopted by theorists on artistic practice. It is not too dogmatic even when it seeks to establish a series of exact definitions and to classify formally the many components which go to the compounding of the perfect picture; and it is explained and illustrated by a great number of thoughtful references to the methods of those ancient and modern masters who have founded or carried on great traditions. The special merit of the book is that it makes no concessions to popular fallacies, but criticises impartially the art that is emptily conventional and that which aims at extravagant novelty; it wisely advocates originality and intelligent experiment as essentials for real artistic progress, but it demands that all good painting, whatever its subject or intention, should have as its foundation decorative qualities of the highest type. In making this demand Professor Holmes sets himself healthily in opposition to that common delusion concerning the worth of decoration—the delusion which has induced so many people to under-estimate the importance of decorative art—and he shows himself, as might, however, have been expected from a thinker of his breadth of mind, keenly appreciative of the value of well-considered design and properly adjusted colour in the making of a picture that claims to be taken seriously. The chapters on the use of materials will be particularly helpful to artists and amateurs, on account of the large amount of information contained in them about the properties of different mediums and the explanations given of the manner in which the various painting processes can most advantageously be employed.

Rombout Verhulst, Sculpteur, 1624—1698. By M. VAN NOTTEN. Translated into French by MME. MARIE WIJK. (The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff) 75 Frs.—It seems strange that whilst pretty well every painter of note should have been honoured with a separate monograph, the great sculptors of the past should have been comparatively neglected. Few probably outside of Holland know much of one of her greatest exponents of plastic art, Rombout Verhulst, whose best work recalls that of some of the most distinguished masters of the Renaissance. For this reason the finely illustrated work of the accomplished Dutch critic, M. Van Notten, that has been well translated into French by Mme. Wijk, will be a revelation to many, so well does it bring out the genius of its subject and so conclusively does it prove the importance of the school to which he belonged. The actual narrative of the life of the sculptor is full of interest, and its author comments on the fact that though the influence exercised by Verhulst on his contemporaries and successors can be very distinctly recognised, there is but little to indicate to whom he himself owed his inspiration. Passing lightly over the sculptor's prentice years at Malines and Amsterdam, he dwells at considerable length on those during which, at Leyden and the Hague, Verhulst reached the culminating point of his glory and produced the series of magnificent monumental sculptures, beginning with the Mausoleum at Katwijk-Binnen and ending with that at Stedum, many of which are not only masterpieces of design and execution, but poems in stone. No less successful were his portrait busts and his bas-reliefs of secular subjects such as that on the façade of the Corn Exchange at Amsterdam, which is a kind of apotheosis of labour, and the equally appropriate composition on the outside of the hospital for the plague-stricken at Leyden. The concluding chapters of Van Notten's book are somewhat melancholy reading, dwelling as they do on the master's declining powers, but even his latest productions bear the unmistakable impress of genius.

Reviews and Notices

A Complete Guide to Heraldry. By A. C. FOX-DAVIES. (Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack.) 10s. 6d. net. Heraldry for Amateurs. By J. S. MILBOURNE. (London: L. Upcott Gill.) 3s. 6d. net.—The word "complete" accurately describes the scope of Mr. Fox-Davies's comprehensive guide to the law and practice of heraldry, for although it professes to be based on his larger work, "The Art of Heraldry," a seven-guinea book now nearly out of print, the subject is as exhaustively treated as anyone outside the Heralds' College could wish. The intricacies of the subject, mystifying to most of those who have not made a special study of it, are explained with admirable lucidity. The interest as well as the utility of the work is considerably enhanced by the coloured plates and multitudinous designs which Mr. Graham Johnston, Herald

Painter to the Lyon Court, has executed expressly for it. Mr. Milbourne's volume makes no pretence to the exhaustive treatment devoted by Mr. Fox-Davies to the subject; he merely calls it "a handbook for beginners," but it has several good points, one of which is a serviceable dictionary of heraldic terms occupying exactly one-half of the 224 pages of letterpress. The explanations throughout are commendably explicit, and the book is printed in good, clear type.

Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them. Vol. I. By HORACE J. WRIGHT and WALTER P. WRIGHT. (London: T. C. & E. C. Jack.) 10s. 6d. net.—The demand for books dealing with the arrangement of the garden and the cultivation of flowers seems to increase, judging by the large number which have been issued during the last twelve months. The first of the two volumes which Messrs. Jack are publishing bears comparison with most of the works on the subject which have hitherto appeared. Messrs. Wrights' letterpress will be found of considerable assistance to amateurs, while the illustrations in colours (of which there are to be fifty in each volume) have been carefully selected and well reproduced. Those after drawings by Miss Fortescue Brickdale, Mr. Hugh Norris, Mr. Francis James, and Mr. Fairfax Muckley are particularly successful. No lover of "beautiful flowers" should be without this work.

A New History of Painting in Italy. By J. A. CROWE and G. B. CAVALCASELLE. Edited by EDWARD HUTTON. (London: J. M. Dent.) Vol. I., 20s. net.—That Crowe and Cavalcaselle's History should still rank as a classic nearly fifty years after publication is proof of its sterling worth, and the editor of the latest edition, of which the first volume only has so far appeared, has done well to retain intact the original text, though he has wisely replaced the old line drawings by reproductions from photographs of famous mosaics and frescoes. He has, however, brought the book thoroughly into line with recent research by copious notes embodying the results of the latest modern criticism. He tells, for instance, the chequered story of the recently discovered frescoes in S. Maria Antiqua and of the newly excavated subterranean church of S. Clemente, both in Rome, and describes the wall-paintings by Pietro Cavallini in S. Cecilia, in Trastevere, that were unknown to Crowe and Cavalcaselle, and might he thinks have modified their judgment on that great artist, and in his opinion disprove Vasari's assertion that he was an assistant of Giotto. The problem offered by the frescoes attributed to Cimabue, in the Upper

Reviews and Notices

Church of S. Francesco at Assisi, appears insoluble to him, but he notes that they are attributed by Arthur Strong and Langton Douglas to a nameless artist of the school of Pietro Cavallini. The whole book bears the impress of true scholarship, and when complete will be a very valuable contribution to art literature.

Behind the Veil in Birdland. By OLIVER G. PIKE, F.Z.S., F.R.P.S. (London: The Religious Tract Society.) 10s. 6d. net.—Whatever may be said about the claims of photography to rank as art, there can be no disputing the invaluable services rendered by the camera in natural history investigations. In the hands of a competent naturalist like Mr. Pike it has been used to good advantage, and the result is seen in this volume with its exceedingly interesting series of photographs taken in his excursions into birdland—a term used by him as synonymous with the countryside. The illustrations are mounted on brown paper and show us many of the denizens of wood and field in their haunts, some familiar enough by name at all events if not by sight, such as the fox and the badger, the squirrel, the thrush, and the kite; while others, as the Fulmar petrel, Richardson's skua, the puffin, the white-tailed eagle, and the chough, are year by year becoming fewer in number and more shy of man. Mr. Richmond Paton, also an ornithologist, has contributed some capital little pen sketches to decorate the pages of this entertaining book.

Le Village dans la Montagne. By EDMOND BILLE and C. F. RAMUZ. (Lausanne: Librairie Payot & Cie.) Frs. 30.—This is a volume which all true lovers of the Alps should possess. It deals neither with the fashionable mountain resort nor with what the modern Philistine is pleased to call "the Alpine sporting ground," but with the simple and picturesque life still to be seen in the villages on the higher slopes of the Valaisan Alps. The charm of the book lies in the fact that it is the combined effort of a Swiss artist and a Swiss writer to evoke the image of what they know so intimately, of what, alas! is beginning to fade out of its magnificent natural setting; and it must be admitted that M. Bille and M. Ramuz have been entirely successful in their effort. They have produced a volume which is at once a contribution to the art of the book and to the artistic treatment of Alpine life. The text is eminently interpretative of the subject with which it deals, and the illustrations as eminently interpretative of the text. The book is profusely illustrated by reproductions in colour of some of M. Bille's pictures and by numerous drawings and sketches by the same artist. One cannot glance at these without feeling that M. Bille has lived long in the Valais and has consecrated his admirable gift to a subject he loves. The volume is printed in beautiful Grasset characters, and the binding, with its ornamental designs by M. Bille, is original and tasteful.

The Gospel in the Old Testament. A Series of Pictures by HAROLD COPPING. With descriptive letterpress by HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Bishop of Durham. (London: the Religious Tract Society.) 16s. net.—This volume—a neatly bound folio with letterpress printed in clear type and twenty-four coloured illustrations mounted on stiff green mounting paper—is a companion volume to the Scenes in the Life of our Lord, by the same collaborators, which was issued by the Religious Tract Society rather more than a year ago. In this new series Mr. Copping, who was sent out by the Society to the Holy Land for the express purpose of executing the drawings, seems to have given himself greater rein than he did when treating the New Testament subjects. Though in these he endeavoured, up to a certain point, to free himself from the conventions which time has sanctified, he has in dealing with the Old Testament themes carried his disregard for the conventional still further. At the same time there is never lacking in his drawings that spirit of reverence which is an indispensable qualification for treating such themes as he has selected, and which are so thoughtfully handled by Dr. Moule in the letterpress accompanying the illustrations.

Art Prices Current, 1907-8. (London: Offices of "The Fine Art Trade Journal.") 10s. 6d. net.—In this volume of over 300 pages are recorded the works—oil paintings, water-colour and other drawings and engravings—sold at Christie's from November 23, 1907, to July 29, 1908. They are printed in catalogue order, a copious index at the end facilitating reference to any particular artist's works. Such a volume is of course extremely useful to the collector, but its usefulness would have been increased if at least the valuable works sold at other places had been included.

Mr. John P. White sends us from the Pyghtle Works, Bedford, an interesting and instructive booklet on Garden Design, containing illustrations of Japanese gardens and garden structures, and some examples of summer-houses, etc., designed for, or carried out in English gardens in the Japanese style, including several by Mr. C. E. Mallows. In an introductory essay, Mr. Rowland Prothero sketches the history of garden design in this country from Tudor times.

The Lay Figure

THE LAY FIGURE: ON DECORATIVE PROBLEMS.

“WHO is to blame for the want of invention in modern domestic decoration?” asked the Man with the Red Tie. “Is it the fault of the designers or of the public? There is something seriously wrong, but I do not quite know who ought to be put in the pillory for it.”

“Oh, surely it is the fault of the public,” said the Designer; “the decorator does not get a chance nowadays of showing what he can do. He has to follow a fashion and go where that fashion leads him. No one would have anything to say to him if he tried to be original.”

“I am inclined to look upon the decorator as being to a great extent the sport of circumstances,” broke in the Art Critic. “I admit he is rather a misused person, but it is to the social conditions which prevail at the present time rather than to the wilful unkindness of the public that his misfortunes are due.”

“What have social conditions got to do with styles of decoration?” asked the Man with the Red Tie. “I cannot see the connection.”

“Perhaps not,” replied the Critic; “but there is one all the same. Just think how people live now and what kind of houses they mostly live in; what opportunities are there for the decorator? It is all very well to say that he is lacking in invention and that he merely follows a fashion, but I question whether you would suggest anything else that he could possibly do.”

“Then you admit that the blame lies upon the public,” cried the Designer, “and that the art of decoration languishes because people will not give it any encouragement.”

“Not quite that,” returned the Critic. “I would rather put it in this way; that with things as they are people cannot give the decorator proper encouragement unless he is prepared to make radical alterations in his methods and to adapt himself to the conditions which circumstances impose upon him.”

“What alteration can he make?” protested the Designer. “What opening has he for new developments when he is so hedged round by circumstances?”

“For one thing, he might realize that the modern house is not a place in which to attempt revivals of styles that were in vogue two or three centuries ago,” said the Critic. “There is an obvious absurdity in trying to bring the past into agreement with an entirely incongruous present. Every period has its own appropriate decorative style which is, as I contend, the outcome of social conditions, and what is right in one period must plainly be wrong in another when these conditions have completely changed.”

“I willingly grant you that,” cried the Man with the Red Tie, “for you are practically admitting what I said just now—that there is a want of invention in modern decoration. Nothing proves this better than the constant digging up of dead styles which is the habit of most designers of the present day.”

“But what is the cure for it?” asked the Designer. “That is what I want to know. I argue that people want these dead styles.”

“I do not think they want them,” replied the Critic, “but they have to put up with them because they cannot get anything else. Stock patterns of most of these old styles are kept at the shops to which the man who is fitting up a house goes to buy decorations, and from what is offered him he chooses the style that offends him least. But it does not follow that he would not take something fresher, something more in keeping with the time in which he lives—if he could get it.”

“But what would be more in keeping with our own times?” asked the Designer.

“Ah, that is the problem you and your fellows have to solve,” laughed the Critic. “It is not for me to say how you should set about it. But I would ask you to remember those social conditions upon which I lay so much stress. The modern man does not often live in a house of his own; he takes a lease of a place that belongs to someone else and when his term is up there he leases another house. Sometimes he is fortunate enough to find rooms decorated in a satisfying fashion; more often he has to put up with an unholy compromise between the builder’s own taste and what the builder thinks is the public taste; and if he is allowed any voice in the selection of the decorations, his choice is usually circumscribed within narrow limits. Now, why should not the designer take into account the case of men like this? What they want is some sort of portable decoration which could be adapted to any kind of house, and which would offer scope for the display of individual ideas. Surely there are possibilities of rational development along these lines.”

“We are to carry about with us prettily decorated shells to live in, like snails. Well, why not?” commented the Man with the Red Tie.

THE LAY FIGURE.

Architectural League Exhibition

PUBLIC LIBRARY, COLUMBUS, OHIO

ALBERT R. ROSS, ARCHITECT

THE ARCHITECTURAL LEAGUE EXHIBITION BY HENRY H. SAYLOR

IN EACH successive exhibition of the Architectural League in New York the value of the exhibits seems to increase for the layman, with a corresponding decrease of interest for the architect himself. Not that the exhibition becomes less representative each year, but undoubtedly it is becoming less technical in its manner of presentation. There were few noteworthy architectural designs hung in the galleries of the American Fine Arts Building this year with which the architects themselves were not familiar through the wealth of illustration in the architectural magazines. But if most of the strictly architectural work was an old story, the exhibits offered by the painters and sculptors contained a wealth of material of very vital interest to the profession. And for the layman, to whom nearly all the drawings and photographs were entirely new, the exhibits, numbering 758, and including, probably, a thousand presentation units, offered a splendid résumé of the year's work in the fine arts—a showing full of encouragement for a more beautiful America. The exhibition this year has become so much larger and the various exhibits were of such a uniform excellence that the task of picking out the most notable work has become difficult indeed.

Interest in the annual competition for the Henry O. Avery prize and a special prize of $300 has increased with a bound, judging from the great increase in the number of entries. The programme

ELEVATION MUNICIPAL GROUP FOR SPRINGFIELD

PELL AND CORBETT
ARCHITECTS

XCIX

Architectural League Exhibition

called for a monument to a great American sculptor, the design to be by an architect, a mural painter and a sculptor, in collaboration. To Augustus Jaegers, sculptor, Grace Johnson, painter, and Thomas R. Johnson, architect, were awarded both prizes. Thomas Mott Shaw, of Boston, was given a special mention in the award for the excellence of his architectural arrangement, and to Robert K. Ryland was given a mention for his painting, in collaboration with Henri Crenier, sculptor, and Aymar Embury II, architect.

Another annual event in connection with the exhibition was the awarding of the Medal of Honor in Architecture for 1908 to Trowbridge & Livingston for their stately residence for Mr. Henry Phipps, on Fifth Avenue, New York City. This is the fourth year in which the New York Chapter, A. I. A., has honored members of the profession in this way, and it is interesting to recall that the medal has gone, in 1905, to Carrère & Hastings, for the Guggenheim residence at West End, N. J.; in 1906 to McKim, Mead & White, for the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York; and in 1907 to Pell & Corbett, for the Maryland Institute at Baltimore.

The league has established, also, a Medal of Honor for Mural Painters, and this year it was awarded to John La Farge, for his magnificent decoration, The Angel of the Sun, for the Paulist Church, New York.

To complete an appropriate recognition of the three arts, for the harmonious fostering of which the League exists, there is awarded annually a Medal of Honor for Sculpture. J. Q. A. Ward was the recipient this year in appreciation of his heroic bronze of Henry Ward Beecher.

Among the exhibits representing buildings of a monumental or public nature was a plaster model designed to show the interior of the New Theatre, by Carrère & Hastings. Unfortunately, its position was such as to make an inspection of the interior very difficult, while the absence of the elaborate system of entrances, foyers and promenades lost to the exhibition visitors the most characteristic portion of this exquisite design. Messrs. McKim, Mead & White's accepted design for the New York Municipal Office Building was shown to far better advantage with elevations, plans and two excellent perspectives. The design owes much of its success to the suggestion, through the tower, of brotherhood with the old City Hall. A suggestive scheme for the New York Court House, by Howells & Stokes, attracted attention by reason of its overwhelming size and its strong verticality, yet one could not help wishing that we need not erect buildings of the positively uncouth scale of the scheme for the uptown McAdoo terminal and department store shown last year. Cass Gilbert exhibited a perspective drawing of his admirable New Central Library for St. Louis; Albert R. Ross was well represented by his public library for Columbus, and a very small but very good proposed town library by Aymar Embury II deserves mention. Photographs of three Carnegie branch libraries by McKim, Mead & White were shown, two of which were charming, and one—for West One Hundred and Fifteenth Street—the monotonous rustication of which suggested only a very feeble exercise in stereotomy. Palmer & Hornbostel's design for the University of Pittsburgh was another of the good things of the exhibition, and Pell & Corbett's accepted design for the Municipal Group at Springfield, Mass., presented a notably successful combination of two civic buildings of severely classic design, flanking a masterly bell tower. A front elevation drawing, entered by Tracy, Swartwout & Litchfield, in the competition for the Shriner's Mosque in Brooklyn, was one of the most startling bits of successful moonlight rendering ever seen on the gallery walls.

Ecclesiastical architecture seemed rather less in evidence this year for some reason, yet Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson's proposed community house for the Paulist Fathers; Maginnis & Walsh's St. Joseph's Church at Dayton, Ohio; a tiny white-washed stone chapel on Mr. Thomas Ryan's estate in Virginia by Joseph H. McGuire, and a charming unsigned drawing of the parish building for Grace Church, New York, by William W. Renwick, were representative of the encouraging wave of betterment that is sweeping over America's church architecture.

There seemed to be a lack of new things, also, under the head of commercial buildings, due, no doubt, to the late unpleasantness in the financial situation. A proposed restaurant on Broadway, by Aymar Embury II, Alfred Busselle and Herbert French, associated, was shown by a distinctly successful façade; Tracy, Swartwout & Litchfield's Connecticut Savings Bank for New Haven was irreproachable, and a number of photographs of well-known banking houses by York & Sawyer recorded some of the very best commercial architecture of to-day.

Domestic architecture was most generously represented, and without doubt it formed the most interesting part of the exhibition to the majority of laymen visitors. There is space to do little more than record the more interesting of these exhibits, any one of which is deserving of far greater attention.

"An epoch-making design for the frank use of concrete blocks in a country house"

RESIDENCE OF EDWARD S. HARKNESS, ESQ.
NEW LONDON, CONN.
LORD AND HEWLETT, ARCHITECTS

Architectural League Exhibition

WEST WING PEDIMENT
WISCONSIN STATE CAPITOL

GEORGE B. POST & SONS
ARCHITECTS

With the exception of the Henry Phipps residence, which has been mentioned before, and Bertram Goodhue's own city house, all of the houses that seemed most worthy of mention were of the country-house type. They were: Albro & Lindeberg's farm cottage for Tracy Dows, at Rhinebeck, N. Y.; a preliminary study, with charming roof lines, of a house for H. M. Verrill, at Sebago Lake, by Grosvenor Atterbury and J. A. Tompkins, associated; a simple and dignified Italian house at Oceanic, N. J., by Bosworth & Holden; a simple plaster cottage at Rockport, Mass., by Frank A. Bourne; a residence for Morgan Cowperthwaite at Chappaqua, N. Y.; an English house at Melrose, Pa., by Frank Miles Day & Brother, the delicate pencil drawings for which seemed unduly modest in the mass of color and brilliant photography around them; a typically Philadelphia stone house for George R. Yarrow at New Centerville, Pa., by Duhring, Okie & Ziegler; a very attractive house, in spite of the photographs, for George W. King, at Marion, Ohio, by Wilson Eyre; a country house and stable in white plaster for A. A. Fowler, at Peapack, N. J., by Edward S. Hewitt, associated with Charles D. Lay as landscape architect; an epoch-making design for the frank use of concrete blocks in a country house for E. S. Harkness at New London, Conn., by Lord & Hewlett; a number of Charles A. Platt's eminently successful country seats, illustrated by excellent photographs; Price & McLanahan's now quite familiar Schoen house at Rose Valley, Pa., and three charming drawings by Birch Burdette Long for houses by Reed & Stem.

Among the exhibits under the general head of decoration La Farge's elaborate scheme for the Paulist Church has been mentioned; in addition he was represented by numerous other studies and photographs of finished mural paintings and stained glass. Edwin H. Blashfield's studies in charcoal for the Wisconsin Capitol decorations figured prominently in the exhibition, the figures, representing The Future, Wisconsin and The Mississippi River, embodying to a particular degree the character of their subjects. Clara M. Burd's color illustrations for Tennyson's "In Memoriam" and her Easter Morning, a church mural decoration, deserve commendation, as do E. Irving Couse's The Love Call, W. B. Cox's Perseus, Albert Herter's cartoon for tapestry, Youth and Love; Ellen Ma-

Study for Wisconsin Capitol

THE FUTURE

BY E. H. BLASHFIELD

Architectural League Exhibition

cauley's Fortuna, F. Dana Marsh's Branches of Engineering, Maxfield Parrish's characteristic sketch for an overmantel, F. T. Richard's Old King Cole, Herman Schladermundt's masterly decorations for Cass Gilbert's Essex County Court House, in the grand jury room; Robert V. V. Sewell's Birth

CLEVELAND TRUST COMPANY

GEORGE B. POST & SONS, ARCHITECTS

of Ogier the Dane, W. B. Van Ingen's magnificent frieze for the United States Circuit Court at Chicago, The Divine Law; and two mural proofs for library decoration—one, The Tiber, by J. Munroe Hewlett, the other, Santa Maria della Salute, Venice, by R. T. Willis.

As for the sculpture, a memorial tablet and two massive, rough-hewn granite reliefs for the First National Bank, of Cleveland, Ohio, of which J. Milton Dyer is architect, were well worthy of their author, Karl Bitter. An unusually chaste relief in plaster for an overmantel came from Harriet W. Frishmuth. That the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences is to be particularly happy in its sculptural decorations was made certain by the appearance of Hebrew Prophecy and Mosaic Law, by Augustus Lukeman; Indian Literature, by Attilio Piccirilli, and Japanese Art, by Janet Scudder. Miss Scudder's bronze fountain, also, was exceptionally successful, and her portrait medallions in silver were exquisite. A large model of the Grant Monument in Washington, H. M. Shrady, sculptor, and E. P. Casey, architect, deserved the large space allotted to it. The seated figure, William Cullen Bryant, modeled by Herbert Adams for the New York Public Library, is well worthy of its setting. J. Q. A. Ward showed a number of works, among which was the notable pediment for the New York Stock Exchange and the Henry Ward Beecher Monument for Brooklyn. A. A. Weinman was well represented, particularly by his bronze eagle for the Prison Ship Martyrs' Monument, and by a well-studied clock-case group for the Pennsylvania Terminal Station. It was good to come upon two decorative bronze panels by Saint-Gaudens.

In stained glass there were some excellent roundels and a collection of details from the dining-hall windows of the new University Club in Chicago, by Frederic Clay Bartlett; Truth, a sketch by Nicola D'Ascenzo for a memorial window at Sea Bright, N. J.; The Heavenly Marriage, Divine Forgiveness and a cartoon for The Prodigal Son, by Ida Dougherty, and a design for a transept window at Minneapolis and a memorial in Temple Adath Israel at Louisville, by Harry Eldredge Goodhue.

Of chief interest among the exhibits of students' work was the winning design for the Prize of Rome—a proposed home of the American Academy in Rome, by Edgar I. Williams, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Then there were the premiated drawings for the Paris Prize, won by William Van Alen, with Carl C. Adams second. W. L. Bottomley sent from the American Academy in Rome several well-rendered drawings of the House of the Vetii, Pompeii; Thomas H. Ellett sent from the same school a good perspective of the Pantheon, Rome, and F. M. Summerville's water color of the Tour St. Jacques deserves mention.

There were a number of other exhibits—falling under none of the above heads, unless it be that of decoration, but none the less interesting for that; two panels of fascinating brick work in a country house at Oyster Bay, Carrère & Hastings, architects, which were exhibited by Fiske & Co.; a section of Grueby tiled floor for a church, designed by A. B. Le Boutillier; a mantel relief in faience, Wolf Hounds, by Frederick G. R. Roth, and, from the T. F. Baldwin Company, three pieces of exquisitely hand-tooled and painted leather—one a reproduction of a South Kensington Museum example, the other two designed by C. Luce and E. E. Lord, respectively.

A Problem in Office Decoration

DIRECTORS' ROOM OF THE NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH CO.
WEST ORANGE, N. J.

DESIGNED BY WALTER AVERY CLEVELAND
AND EXECUTED BY THE "SIGN OF THE
HAMMER," MONTCLAIR, N. J.

A PROBLEM IN DECORATION IN A TYPICAL CONCRETE OFFICE BUILDING

A PROBLEM which in its original condition seemed to offer very little of suggestiveness for successful decoration was a room in a modern concrete factory building. The directors' room of the National Phonograph Company in West Orange, N. J., shown herewith in illustration, as re-decorated by Walter Avery Cleaveland, is situated on the top floor of the building, directly under the roof. Its huge concrete beams are seen in the room and a decided slant to the roof gives the ceiling a height ranging from twelve to fourteen feet, with a floor space only fifteen by twenty. The north and west walls of the room are almost entirely filled with windows, three on the shorter and four on the longer side. The glare of light which flooded the room was very unpleasant. It was reflected from the sky and the bright gray sides and windows of another building near by, and was neither softened by dark shades nor by a wall covering which might have absorbed some of the light. The other two walls were covered with a light-colored buckram, with no line to break the vertical expanse except a picture molding near the ceiling. The height and shut-in effect of the room were exaggerated by pictures of various subjects scattered about the walls of the room, many of them above the door casings. The door openings, which are of usual size, extend very little over half the height of the room and seemed out of all proportion. The building was evidently planned in all good faith, with considerations for economy, strength of construction, light and ventilation, but very little for proportion.

STENCILED BAND ON CURTAINS, IN PHONOGRAPH MOTIVE

A Problem in Office Decoration

Such surroundings would undoubtedly have a distracting effect upon the heads of departments gathered here for deliberation and discussion of important questions of business policy. In devising a scheme, therefore, which should meet more nearly the use intended for the place, the determination of space values, light and color were all important.

To avoid the sense of height a rail was carried around the room just under the door cap, allowing the door frame to break the monotony of the lower line of the frieze, which extends twenty-four inches above this rail. By tinting the walls and ceiling above the frieze in an even, flat tone emphasis is carried down to a line which defines a space in proportion to the height of the doors, and makes the apparent height of the room extend only to the top of the frieze. This line is carried over on the window curtains by a stenciled band of the same width and design. When the curtains are drawn together the band forms an unbroken line completely around the room. The vertical lines in the paneling below the rail add still more weight and emphasis to the lower half of the room, and are a variation from the horizontal lines in the frieze. They, therefore, assist in attracting attention away from the true ceiling line.

The predominant colors are soft greens and dark browns. They give relief by absorbing the intense light which fills the room, but the quantity of light may be regulated by the green shades or shut out almost entirely by the heavy lined draperies. The frames about the panels and frieze are enriched by a Japanese burlap, upon which the raised portions are flecked with green. The main body of the panels are hung in soft green burlap, with the raised portions flecked with gold. The design on the frieze and curtain border is stenciled in flat green of

DIRECTORS' ROOM OF THE NATIONAL
PHONOGRAPH COMPANY
WEST ORANGE, N. J.

DESIGNED BY WALTER AVERY CLEAVELAND
AND EXECUTED BY THE "SIGN OF THE
HAMMER," MONTCLAIR, N. J.

Indirect Radiation

INTERIOR FITTED WITH INDIRECT RADIATION

WM. G. PRESTON AND JOHN KAHLMEYER, ARCHITECTS

a tone slightly heavier than the burlap panels, while the design on the panels is lightly stenciled in gold. The curtains are made of a coarse basket weave, known as friar's cloth, in warm green, with bands of coarse mercerized cotton of plain weave in a golden yellow. The furniture and trim are in a warm, dark brown. The leather used on the chairs has a variegated surface coloring of tan and green, a combination which serves to tie the green and brown tones of furniture and wall together.

When the question of motive for ornament arose the purpose of the room and the business of the company suggested itself. The plant being the property of the National Phonograph Company and including Mr. Edison's own experiment laboratories, the motive of the decoration was naturally the phonograph, with its bell and records. Unfortunately, it was not found convenient to carry out this motive in the chandelier. This detail would offer an opportunity to add one more expression of the bell flower motive suspended in a cluster from the ceiling. The floor being concrete is covered with a linoleum in parquet-flooring design, in the same tones as the woodwork and furniture, but only a border of it is exposed beyond the edges of a plain Axminster rug in green.

AN EXAMPLE IN HEATING BY INDIRECT RADIATION

AN INGENUOUS solution of the problem involved in the attempt to heat a room by modern methods without spoiling its appearance is presented in the accompanying photograph and section. In this instance the architects, Messrs. Preston and Kahlmeyer, have availed themselves of the latest ideas in radiation through an ornamental grill with excellent success. Circulation is provided as shown in the drawing, the fresh air being carried down behind the back of the window seat from the window, while the heat is supplied without declaring its source. This also effects an economy of space.

Garden Furniture

ESTATE OF OAKLEIGH THORNE, ESQ.
MILLBROOK, N. Y.

BALUSTRADES AND GARDEN FURNITURE
BY THE ERKINS COMPANY

THE USE OF CEMENT FOR GARDEN FURNITURE

EVER since Mr. Edison made his suggestion for supplying the public with small houses at low cost by casting them from molds, as a caterer serves ices, the layman has realized something of the remarkable advance which concrete has made of recent years as a building-material. The problem of the use of concrete has been well studied by engineers. The structural aspects of the question have been tested with some thoroughness and, although the material has its limitations, its practical virtues commend it. When we come to inquire, on the other hand, what progress has been made in the esthetic problems presented we find less satisfaction among architects. Two difficulties have been encountered—the deadness of the ordinary surface which is left after the forms are removed and the perverse danger of seeking relief by imitating the traits of stone and stone construction. If a concrete wall is to be covered with a facing of some other material the concrete is used as the Romans often used brick and in itself presents no opportunity for an artistic success. The Assyrian walls of unbaked bricks compressed into mass by their own weight after being laid were apparently treated in a similar fashion, and neither here nor in the stucco-covered walls of Italy and the Mediterranean country do we find any precedent for the problem which faces our architects in this new material. It functions differently from stone and yet has something of the appearance of stone, so that its development of a peculiar style is retarded. The designer's eye accustomed to masonry distrusts the artistic value of the forms which reinforced concrete safely and appropriately takes. The same thing, of course, happens with new ma-

ESTATE OF
OAKLEIGH THORNE, ESQ.

BALUSTRADES AND GARDEN FURNITURE
BY THE ERKINS COMPANY

Garden Furniture

RESIDENCE OF OAKLEIGH THORNE, ESQ.
MILLBROOK, N. Y.

THOMAS NASH, ARCHITECT
BALUSTRADES BY THE ERKINS COMPANY

materials generally. Structural iron or steel appears first in pillars resembling stone columns, and for that matter many of our cherished conventions in stone architecture are the fossil forms of timber building without any vital meaning of their own. That concrete is destined to produce a modification of forms at once expressive of its capabilities, suited to its uses and pleasing to the eye is the inference that the history of other structural materials imposes. It is useful and eventually we shall learn to use it gracefully. Already there are indications of some of the probable results in architectural design, such as the flat arch and the tapering beam, as recently pointed out by Mr. Howes.

Meanwhile, when architects are still in several minds as to the wisdom of a general use in the building of houses of a material which they cannot yet pretend to have mastered, it has been taken in hand by the landscape architect without misgivings. In the first place, the neutral tone of its usual color, which has been considered in many cases a sufficient fault to bar it out of consideration at least for metropolitan surroundings—this unassertive tinge is delightful in a setting of trees and lawns. Marble and fresh-cut stone cannot compare with it in some color effects. And as the sand with which the cement must be mixed can usually be that of the neighborhood the variety of available color is by no means a thing to be despised, more particularly as in such a case it has a natural appropriateness. Durability is a virtue in which the material at its best outdoes stone. It has the lasting qualities that withstand freezing and thawing; with a coating of special cement it can be made waterproof, and in case of injury it can be repaired, the renewed portions becoming perfectly integrated with the old body.

TILE HOUSE
INTERLOCKEN, N. J.

SQUIRES AND WYNKOOP
ARCHITECTS

Recent Work by Squires and Wynkoop

PHI DELTA THETA FRATERNITY HOUSE
WILLIAMS COLLEGE

SQUIRES AND WYNKOOP
ARCHITECTS

RECENT WORK BY SQUIRES AND WYNKOOP

THE brick building of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity house at Williams College is an interesting example of recent work in college architecture. The building, as demanded for its purpose, affords a generous interior for partition on a plot of ground of modest proportions without shooting up to a height which would be out of keeping with its surroundings in a village street. Care has been taken to effect a pleasant variety of surface in the brick walls by recessed courses, trims, inlays, marked-out window spaces and occasional special patterns. The steep pitched roof is fitting to the northern mountainous region and the twin-columned portico, without taking emphasis in the design, suggests the architectural traditions of a district settled at an early date.

The dwelling-house shown on the preceding page is an example in concrete work, the photograph being taken before the trees were in leaf, to show the handling of masses and spaces frankly. The architects, Messrs. Squires and Wynkoop, have given considerable attention to work in this material. The use of hollow tile and other fireproof material they have carried to a point of facility with good results. Interesting dwellings have been built by them in New Jersey among the Oranges and in the neighborhood of Newark. The house built for Professor Lough at University Heights is said to have been the first terra-cotta tile house built in New York City. They have made an effective use of concrete beams, and hollow-tile walls.

Modern Brickwork

MODERN BRICKWORK I. MATERIALS BY CHARLES W. STOUGHTON

THE architect of to-day still avails himself of the same building material that served his arch fellow craftsmen so well in the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temples and palaces of Assyria and of Persia. The oldest of manufactured products, we look upon brick as one of the most usable of our modern resources for pavements, for walls and for decoration. As often as architecture lifts up its head and flourishes brickwork has a little Renaissance of its own and shows anew how much it can help in developing and perfecting the characteristic traits of a style when it is used in the proper way—after its own bricky character, so to speak—leaving the field free for stone to be used as stone and terra cotta as terra cotta. Each in turn will play its full part in influencing the architecture of a period and each will find new forms for itself in terms that express the artistic temperament of a nation.

Thus we have come to think of the Italians of the north, where clay abounds and stone does not, as loving to work principally in terra cotta and brick; of the French as availing themselves of brick for the pattern work of the Normandy manor houses or for the finely contrasting wall surfaces, used with stone, of their châteaux; of the Dutch as loving brick and terra cotta for themselves and using them to build up a new and indigenous architecture for city and country, and of the English as bringing out all of the good homely character of brick in its use, either alone or with stone, in their country houses. Each of these people impressed its stamp on the brick architecture which it perfected. Each received the due reward of its labor in producing notable variations of its own type of architecture, which differed thus in spirit and in form from those of the Eastern nations and differ not less from the

BRICK AND TERRA-COTTA HOUSE

CANTON
CHINA

appropriation which we are now making to our own purposes of the same little blocks of clay.

In the older world we come, with the joy of discoverers, upon the remains of the beautiful brick pattern work of Persia and the farther East, or upon the huge, gaunt walls of Roman buildings, stately in their ruin, their surface and colors almost like the stone which has been taken from them. We are astonished at their aspect of dignified antiquity. In our own cities no brickwork is ever very old, much less impressive; the weather biting into the poor mortar of the earlier work soon brings its small units into crumbling ruin and we sweep them impatiently away.

It would certainly appear inevitable that in the age-long handling of brick, so elemental in its shape, so restricted in its color, every possible arrangement and variation of form must long since have been found, used and perfected, every motif exhausted by people, who, limited to the use of burnt clay, were also instinctive artists in conventional patterns and colors; yet so unfailing is the response of Art to the call for beauty of each succeeding generation of men who will seek her, that not only are these forms not hackneyed in our use of them, but we come to them as if for us, first

A CHINESE COUNTRY SEAT

CX

Modern Brickwork

BRICK WALL WITH STONE PANEL

CANTON
CHINA

the clay were being mixed and burned, the terra cotta molded, the tiles dipped and fired.

Each great family of artisans takes from the common stock what it can devise and use, and brings a new and ever human interest to the working over of the old forms into the expression of its new life. For us of this time, to cite one instance, opening vistas of house and garden architecture present new and hitherto unthought-of problems; of wall surfaces that shall be appropriate to city streets or to country lawns and glades; of terraces, pavilions and pavements that are to become a part of their natural setting, and these requirements, the outcome of our expansion of life, bring to the designer the opportunity of lavishing upon them his most refined skill.

And this he must do with the simplest material, formed in insignificant units which have not varied their size or shape enough to affect design since the building of the Tower of Babel. Perhaps it is the suggestion of this message, as of the oldest universal language of human devising, willingly accepted by people as far separated in every other usage of life as the East is from the West, that makes the brick forms appear to us so companionable. The slight variation of dialects, the shapes and colors of the words removes no branch of the family far from the parent stem. The bricks themselves may be the long Roman form of the Baths and the Pantheon, the smooth gray bricks of China or the great flat slabs of the old city wall of Mandalay, and the jointing may vary from a hair crack to the deep mortar beds that exceed the thickness of the clay—it is all one to us; at a little distance they look alike, they are still brick walls, mellowed it may be by the suns and rains of a thousand or two years, or built from a burning, up the river, of a few months ago. The weather has eaten out the joints during the centuries or the tucking tool has grooved them out and the individual bricks show their bond equally on the mosques of Ispahan, the town halls of Belgium and the latest Riverside Drive apartment house.

In the hands of those who love to use it the resources of brick alone are ample. Given even a single color and size and the freedom to lay the bricks in patterns, with vertical and header courses, cutting corners to make diagonal figures, raising or sinking bands and panels—the wall so built be-

MORTUARY MONUMENT OF SHAH ZINDA

SAMARKAND

Modern Brickwork

COLOMBIER D'ANGO

VERANGEVILLE, FRANCE

comes a fine study; its surface, demure enough in the direct light, emerging and seizing our attention with unexpected interest as the glancing sun's rays bring every elevation and depression into delicate relief. We add another shade of the same color of the brick and make the wall less dependent on the direction of the light and capable of almost infinite variation and play of surface. We may further add bricks of other colors and set tiles with the same or different surfaces into the wall and thus accentuate our bands and panel work by color contrast, bringing out all of the original quality and warmth of the wall color, and recalling to the eye at the same time the wall texture which counts for so much in the aspect of the building.

One might consider this opportunity enough for the age-long satisfaction of a race of clay workers with walls to build, as it was for the Assyrians and Persians with their splendid brick and tile tombs and palaces. We shall adequately illustrate our own chapter of the History of Art if we can do as well as they; but for us there is the further resource of stone, to harmonize or contrast with every color and every texture of brick. We may use a pale yellow brick and a white terra cotta or stone and get a harmony of agreement, or with a clear red brick and white marble get a brilliant contrast, and in doing either we shall find that the quality and color of each material is immeasurably enhanced by the other, the marble appearing more crystalline and translucent and the brick more rich and opaque by the contrast.

In this our sense of enjoyment is heightened and stimulated; we appreciate anew the fine elemental qualities of the stone and of the brick by their effect upon each other where both are made to appear at their best.

Whatever the similarity or difference, however, in the neighboring materials, brick must be used in ways appropriate to its small scale, its intractable nature, its evident limitations—stone, as becomes its own qualities and stony heart. There can be no successful imitation of either by the other in surface or in tooling, no continuing of the members of one by the other, but a clean, sure line of separation and preferably some difference of color wherever they come together, the brick keeping to the things which it does so well, its broad wall surfaces and panels, its slight offsets and flat bands, the stone supplementing these with its moldings, its lintels and columns.

The relation of color and of texture between the two materials may, as we have seen, be varied to any extent from the self scheme to the complementary scheme, a smooth stone serving as the refining element to a rough-surfaced brick with strongly accentuated bond, or finely laid pressed-brick panels quieting the too vigorous stone. The bricks that are now being made enable us to do this, for they show more and more variety of form and of surface, serving and, indeed, leading our excursions in the art of bricklaying into new and wider fields. Added to this is a renewed appreciation of the value to the wall of the separate bricks, an idea as old as

FISH MARKET

HAARLAEM, HOLLAND

MOSQUE OF SCHECH SAFI

ARDEBIL

MAUSOLEUM OF MUMINE CHATUN

NACHT SCHEWAN

Modern Brickwork

the kilns but new to us, offering the chance of further variety in the jointing and giving us a firmer grasp of the true use of brickwork. Formerly the only variation in the laying of the bricks was found in the bond, which might be English or Flemish or plain American, but in all of them the joints of face work were flush with the surface and as small as could be laid, so that they counted for little. While good work, especially as paneling with tooled stone-work, is still laid in this way to give smooth, refined surfaces, other brickwork in both city and country receives a fine robust quality from being laid with large joints, flush or tucked back in a groove, leaving the horizontal and sometimes the vertical edges of the bricks to stand sharply out and cast their shadows, individually, into the hollow joints. Such walls have a vigorous quality comparable to stone in their ability to hold their own and to harmonize with the setting of nature.

To attempt to even indicate all of the varied resources of this friendly material and its humble companion, mortar, would far exceed the limitations of our space and the reader's patience, but in another article we will follow the course of some of our architects in their working of this old and yet ever new field of opportunity. C. W. S.

BRAMSHILL, HANTS

CHATEAU DE MAINTENON

CXIV

ACCORDING to the thirty-ninth annual report of the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art the year ending December, 1908, showed the largest attendance in the museum's history, as well as the largest number of accessions, and the inauguration of a policy of special exhibitions, beginning with that of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, followed by one of contemporary German art, both of which were reviewed in the columns of the International Studio. The attendance was 817,809; that of 1907 was 800,763. The accessions numbered 5,686 objects of art, an increase of 1,847 over the previous year. Among the most important of these accessions are the extensive collection of laces—numbering 967 pieces—from Mrs. Magdalena Nuttall; the bequest of fifteen modern paintings from Mrs. Martha T. Fiske Collord; the Miss Jane Hunt legacy of the Girl at the Fountain, painted by William Morris Hunt; the gift of the portrait of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, by Kenyon Cox, from a group of the sculptor's friends and admirers through A. F. Jaccacci. Two important additions to the collection of sculpture have been received from Mr. Edward D. Adams: La Main de Dieu, a marble by Rodin, and Die Mutter, a marble group by Lewin-Funke. The Egyptian expedition resulted in uncovering a headless Osiride figure of Usertesen I.

